MAN WHO SHOT OFFICER CAUGHT

NEW YORK, Mar. 29.—Captured by a detective after he had fought a revolver battle with and slightly wounded Patrolman Joseph L. Howard of the Classon avenue station, Brooklyn, Frank H. Feser, Jr., a suspected bandit, was shot twice and seriously injured at 488 Nostrand avenue early today. He is at the Kings County Hospital, where it is feared he will die.

Detective James McCormack shot Feser when he cornered him in the search which followed the wounding of Howard and after it is said, Feser had leveled a revolver and pulled the trigger. The weapon missed fire and the detective fired several shots, two of which took effect.

Howard, who was attempting to make an arrest when the shots were fired, was only slightly wounded, the bullet being deflected by his heavy uniform coat and causing only a flesh wound. Another bullet, allegedly fired by Feser, ripped off the patrolman's cap.

Frank Leonard, a tall chauffeur of 282 Midwood street, Brooklyn, was cruising at Utica avenue and Eastern Parkway when he saw four men holding up another chauffeur. He followed them when they walked off, but they evaded him.

Half an hour later he saw two men who he believed had been among the four in Putnam avenue. He also thought they were two of the five men who had held him up Wednesday night at Nostrand avenue and Winthrop street. He called Patrolman Howard and with the latter on the running board of his cab, continued the pursuit.

When the cab drew near them, it is said, the pair turned and saw Howard. Feser, it is charged, drew a revolver and began firing. Two or three bullets went wide, but the next tore a hole in the top of the policeman's hat and snatched it from his head. The next struck him a glancing blow in the abdomen, penetrating his overcoat and raked his body, leaving a painful but not serious wound.

Chauffeur Gets Cops

The cop returned the fire, but the force of the shot, which struck his abdomen, knocked him from his feet, and the two men, evidently believing him badly hurt, fled.

The chauffeur drove to the Gates avenue station and Lieut. William McCauley, with nearly a dozen reserves, hurried to the scene of the shooting. They spread out through the neighborhood. McCormack found Feser hiding under a stoop.

According to the detective, the cornered man attempted to shoot him, but the snap of the falling hammer was the only result. He fired several shots in return, McCormack said, two of which took effect.

Feser, it is said, admitted at the hospital he had been released from the Elmira reformatory six weeks ago. He is a plumber, is married and has two children. He gave his address at 793 Gravesend avenue, Brooklyn.

liminary draft of the petition, it was announced today. Embarrassment was spared the circulator when the teachers met Saturday and upheld the action of the board. The petition died a'born.

So far as the county school superintendent's office is concerned, the petition said to have been circulated among high school students asking for reconsideration of the Darling case, will not be officially recognized until the petition is submitted to the county school clerk.

RURAL SCHOOLS ARE HARD HIT BY "FLU"

School work in many Klamath rural schools has been paralyzed by ravages of the widespread epidemic of influenza, according to reports of county school teachers to the county school superintendent's office Saturday.

In several schools, half the enrollment is absent with the flu. At Libby school, the teacher, Frances Carroll and 14 of the 30 pupils are sick. The same conditions exist at Fort Klamath grade school and high school where approximately half of the 30 pupils are recovering from influenza.

Practically every rural school in the county is more or less hit by the epidemic, although in several schools the peak of the disease has been attained and improvement is noted.

BOARD UPHELD BY SCHOOL TEACHERS

A petition to ask the Klamath county high school board to reconsider their action in refusing to re-elect J. G. Darling, principal of the high school for next year, which was to be circulated among the teachers, proceeded no farther than the pre-
