

CANINES SAVE MANY ALASKANS

SEATTLE, Washington, April 2.—The diphtheria epidemic in Nome, Alaska, bringing its desperate race between death and dog teams with anti-toxin, centered the attention of the country on what has become a commonplace to "sourdoughs," the usual method of transportation in the frozen interior of the northern territory in winter—an adventure at best.

It is only on such occasions as epidemics that the mushing is carried out at such hazardous speed, but the usual progress across the center of Alaska is made once a fortnight throughout the winter by the mail carriers, who travel 870 miles from Nenana to Nome. Numerous other traders, prospectors and trappers are on the go frequently for long or short journeys.

French-Canadians in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company 300 years ago, learning the use of dogs and sleds from Eskimos in the far northwest of America, used to shout "marche" when they wanted the dogs to speed up. In the mouths of English-speaking men this became "mush," which has stuck as a "get up" to the dog and as a designation for travel by dog-drawn sled.

Tragedies of the trail, for men, are comparatively few, partly because the winter drives are undertaken only by hardy, experienced men, and largely because of the uncanny ability of the dogs to avoid hazards of the trail. Overflows are dreaded possibilities. Most of the mushing is done on the ice of rivers or seas and the rest of it overlaid from one body of water to another. Sometimes the swiftness of the current or the entry of a side stream causes the water to flow above the ice, making slush of the snow. There lurks death for man. If he gets into it his legs will freeze—temperatures of 50 degrees below zero are frequent on the trail. Freezing follows instantly after emergence from the slush, and the musher is helpless. But a good lead dog detects an overflow a mile off. He scents it, and suddenly departs from the deep trail and leads the team off through unbroken snow. Around the overflow he detours, coming back to the trail when past the slush.

On ice covered with sharp projections, called spear ice, occurring on rivers and seas, the dogs wear moosehorns. Sometimes under pressure, such as when 200,000 units of anti-toxin were taken from Nenana on the Alaska Railroad January 27 and delivered in Nome by relays of dog teams February 2, several dogs are carried on the sleds, the animals taking turns at riding and running. The principal sled dogs are Huskies and Malamutes. Huskies are crosses of domestic dogs and prairie wolves. They weigh 60 to 65 pounds. Malamutes are crosses of domestic dogs and timber wolves. They weigh 75 pounds and up. The leaders are light in weight. They are brain workers, and really lead. They do not work, but watch the trail.

Trail dogs sleep comfortably in the snow. In a severe blizzard an Alaskan will leave his dogs to burrow in the snow and outlast the storm if they can, and he will make his way to shelter.

SEWING PRIZES ARE OFFERED BY STORE

Because heretofore the girls' exhibits of sewing in Club work have not perhaps received as lavish awards as have the livestock and gardening classes in which the boys predominated, the three first prizes of $5.00 each donated personally by H. N. Moe, were placed in the Sewing awards, one for each of the three divisions of sewing. County Club Leader Sexton realizes that the sewing with its intricate patching, darning and hemming is less appealing to the average county fair visitor although it forms the basis for the beautiful lamp shades, dainty garments and pretty hats the more advanced pupils of the Sewing Clubs turn out. He therefore recommended that the Moe prizes be placed in the girls' division.

There are now to date 127 members enrolled in sewing projects and fifteen standard clubs organized since the beginning of the school term. This is almost double the number of last year and insured some pretty as well as practical displays for the county fair, toward which the girls and boys are looking for the scholarships for Summer School at Corvallis which merchants and business firms of Klamath Falls, as well as the farm bureau, donated last year and which are anticipated, will be in order this season.

ZONING SYSTEM SHOWS RESULTS IN MODERN CITY

WASHINGTON, April 2.—There are now 320 cities in the United States which have demarked the area within their boundaries into zones, setting territory apart for exclusive use as business, residence, industrial or transportation property, the department of commerce reported today in a summary of conditions affecting the proposal.

The most marked progress was made in this form of city planning during 1924, when 62 municipalities adopted the system, fitting the zones to the particular requirements of their localities.

"In adopting zoning ordinances," the department's statement said, "these cities, towns and villages have sought to protect home owners, and other land owners, in the reasonable use of their property. Zoning seeks so to regulate the use to which buildings may be put, the area of the lot which they may cover, and their height in different sections of the city, that the land in each district may be used for the purposes to which it is best suited.
