THIS BUSINESS OF GIVING

Both in output and method giving is assuming the guise of one of the important business undertakings in the United States. Probably only a small proportion of the money devoted by the American people to charitable and philanthropic enterprise is represented by community chests, but 149 of these, out of a total of more than 225, collected last year $43,270,002, which was only $1,284,890 less than the total of the amounts they sought.

The church was once the almoner of the world, but American business men are now the chief financial contributors to agencies dealing with social problems and it is largely upon the initiative of commercial organizations that the collection and administration of funds for this purpose have been put upon a systematic basis.

An extended study of these modern methods of giving, as exemplified in the "financial federation" and "community chest," has been made by the Civic Development Department of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. "Our experience," it says in its report, "with federations and community chests is not yet sufficient for us to reach conclusions and stop thinking. The federation idea is spreading. It will probably become generally accepted. But the form it shall finally take, its purposes beyond the raising of money, its methods—these are not settled. And if they are settled wrong, the loss will not fall alone upon the agencies but upon business and society in general."

HUNT'S WASHINGTON LETTER

By HARRY B. HUNT
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, Apr. 2.—Membership in the United States senate has become almost a family affair in Delaware. Both politically and financially, the Bayard du Pont families seem to have this small but wealthy commonwealth safely pocketed.

Thomas Francis Bayard, senior senator from the gunpowder state is the sixth in his immediate line to sit in the senate. A Bayard as a senator from Delaware has come to seem a necessity. It has become almost a state tradition.

And down east, here, precedent and tradition are still mighty powerful. Bayard's father, his grandfather, his great-grandfather and a great-uncle, on his paternal side, have served his state in the senate. On his mother's side, his great-grandfather, Richard Bassett, sat in the senate at the same time his great-grandfather, James Ashton Bayard, held Delaware's other seat.

Both Delaware seats, for that matter, might be said to be in the same family today. For T. Coleman du Pont, financial overlord of the state and junior senator, is a cousin of Mrs. Bayard and the two families are closely associated.

For that matter, Mrs. Bayard is a cousin also to Mrs. du Pont, which further interweaves the relationship.

At first thought it may seem strange that one family should obtain such lasting political dominance over a state.

When one turns to the census figures, however, and discovers that the total population of Delaware is less than that of the average single congressional district in most states, it seems less surprising.

Rhode Island, the smallest state in area in the union, has almost three times the population of Delaware.

The population of the District of Columbia, less than 10 miles square is twice that of Delaware. In such a restricted field, the prestige and influence of a family that for generations has dominated it politically is hard to combat.

been done so long it has become a habit.

Tom Marshall, philosopher and former vice president, has been "sizing up" the present occupant of the White House who succeeded him as a wielder of the senatorial gavel.

Tom himself always was quite a talker. He was one of the most quoted men in public life during his time in the limelight.

But his study of Coolidge seemingly has impressed him with the advantage that, at times, come to those who 'say little but saw wood.' "In my judgment," says Marshall, "Coolidge is one of the most astute politicians ever in the White House. He knows that silence is the one unanswerable argument."

By all means plan to grow green feed for the Oregon poultry flock, says the college extension service. This is one of the four major classes of feeds necessary for growth and production. Kale is the one best bet. Root crops, alfalfa hay, cabbage, etc., should be provided as an emergency winter feed, because kale does not always live through the winter.

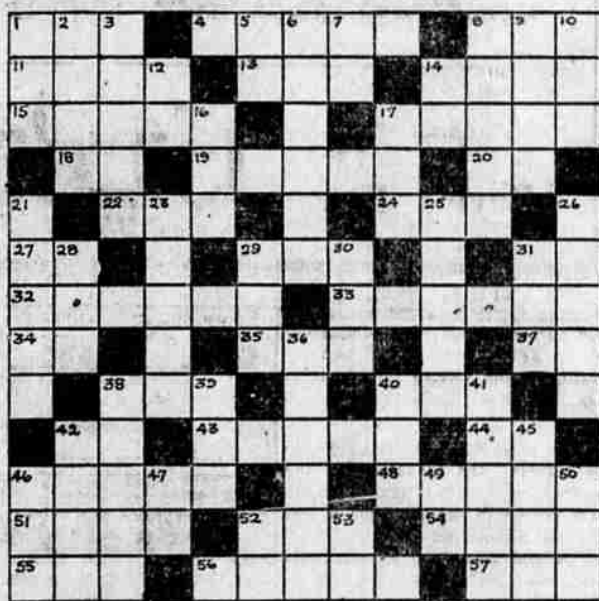

Poisoned Kin

Mrs. Martha Wood, 41, living near Medina, O., a widowed mother of four children, has confessed she administered the arsenic which killed her mother. An uncle and his wife, and caused illness of 13 other relatives and friends. The devil made me do it, she says. "My reason she will give for her act."

YESTERDAY'S SOLUTION

In New York, a woman poisoned two men. Perhaps she may come clear by claiming she was a bigamist.

A woman may go to church to see what she can see and to a party to hear what she can hear.

People, with or without teeth may enjoy learning a Chicago dentist is in jail.

Lightning struck a movie house in Kansas City, perhaps because it read the posters out front.

A New Jersey woman who had her husband 50 years should write a book, if she isn't too busy.

The way they trip the light fantastic now it looks as if they really are tripping.

Nothing feels as crazy as a new straw hat.

OUT OF THE AIR

By JULIUS MUELLER
Manager Radio Dept., Baldwin Hardware Co.

In an effort to explain the efficiency and value of rectifiers used to charge radio storage batteries the Bureau of Standards has just issued technological paper No. 265 entitled, "Theory and Performance of Rectifiers." It is available to all fans from the Superintendent of Documents, at Washington for twenty cents.

The demand for small rectifiers has increased greatly during the last several years owing to the large demand for small storage batteries employed in connection with radio sets, and because of the growing practice of charging larger batteries, at low rates, this practice is called "Trickle Charging."

The purpose of the Bureau's investigation was to obtain data on the performance of the most common forms of rectifiers on the market and to explain the principles underlying their operation.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Klamath Falls, April 2, 1925
The Editor—With reference to news story in Herald of April 1 concerning boy whom Icel Legion post had arranged to provide a home for when it appeared as though he would be sent to the state reform school, I want to say in justice to the boy's stepfather that my investigations disclosed that he had made a worthy effort to manage the boy, to which effort the boy did not respond.

The boy worships the memory of his father who was killed in France and did not yield to the friendly advances of his foster-parent.

I am making this statement in fairness to the boy's stepfather to offset any other impression which might have prevailed. Respectfully,
W. R. CANTON,
Service Officer, Klamath Post No. 8, American Legion.

MRS. BOOTH BETTER

EUGENE, Ore., April 2.—Condition of Mrs. R. A. Booth, wife of the former chairman of the state highway commission, was reported to be slightly improved at her home this morning. She has been critically ill for the past few days.

Girls will be girls. Baltimore one of 197 had a birthday party. Her husband of 109 was there. Her he cut up.
