ORDERLY MARKETING, HOPE OF FARMER

William M. Jardine, the new Secretary of Agriculture, in the Nation's Business magazine, says:

"Cooperation among farmers, properly carried out, will accomplish precisely what farming most needs. It will iron out the peaks and valleys in the agricultural market. It will go far toward securing a constant market at a constant price, giving to agriculture definite permanence in a business way.

"If applied in the right way, cooperation can make of American farming a big voluntarily unified, permanently and dependably profitable business, in a way that no paternalistic legislation could possibly do. The government can aid in developing cooperation, in providing a voluntary clearing house for cooperative organizations. It can, in other words, simply help the farmer to help himself.

"Through cooperative organization farmers can ascertain the demand for each important farm product—first the American demand, then the foreign demand. In the case of products of which more can be produced than the American market calls for, they can find out whether they can produce for the foreign market at a profit in competition with the farmers of other countries.

"They can select the products that they can so produce, and grow them for the export trade. The farmers' own representatives will give them the data that will enable them to decide what to grow and when and how to grow it. This will not mean the elimination of any acreage, but a better balancing of the farm acreage among different products.

"The important thing about a program of this sort is that it takes time by the forelock. It does what a prudent man always endeavors to do in his own business. It gets information beforehand, rather than afterwards. It will put an end to hit-or-miss farming, which under present conditions every farmer has to practice more or less. It will take gambling out of farming—a thing for which good, sound farmers will be devoutly thankful.

STEWART'S WASHINGTON LETTER

BY CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—I see by the papers there's a little anthrax in the country.

New York doctors report a human case. Webster says anthrax is "an infectious and usually fatal disease of animals, especially cattle and sheep, and occasionally of man."

Indeed, in some countries, where health regulations are lax, human cases are fairly common. Not here, however. The only Americans I know of who have had it are Counselor Franklin Adams of the Pan-American Union and me—unless you count that New Yorker, and considering where he lives, he probably isn't an American anyway.

Adams and I occasionally get together to reminisce. Unlike those, for instance, who have had their appendices removed, we have no large audience of other ex-victims who, having been through the same thing, enjoy hearing our sufferings described. So we have to make the most of one another.

ADAMS had his case in Chile. As soon as he was able to travel, after fooling the undertaker, he crossed over to the Argentine side of the Andes, where I was living, only recently recovered from my case. He wasn't entirely well, by any means.

His illness had left him, temporarily, with one trick I couldn't perform myself. Under stress of excitement or any emotion, like anger, his neck would puff up like a balloon right before your eyes. It was weird. Then, as he cooled off, gradually he'd deflate.

But anthrax is too high a price to pay even for such an accomplishment. Nor was Adams proud of it. One day somebody made a remark that trotted him a good deal. "Oh! I wish," he cried, "you hadn't said that. Now, his voice rising to a wall, 'my head will swell!'"

ABD-EL-KRIM—he pronounces it Cream—has the Washington administration somewhat worried. After 15 years of fighting to drive the Spaniards out of his part of Morocco, he has started in on the French.

He has bled Spain nearly to death financially. That didn't matter so much, but with France it does—she owes so much here. The prospect that she'd meet her American obligations was none too bright before. If she's in for the same kind of an experience Spain has had, no such bone remains at all.

ABD, the State Department hears, is a pretty good manager. He has won all his big battles with the Spaniards, but, having more resources than he, they kept on sending fresh troops. Abd looked them up as fast as they arrived, but still more came.

Finally he decided he must get additional tribesmen into the row. That's why he stirred up the natives of French Morocco to rebel. This makes a sizeable war.

WHAT'S more, it appears, according to State Department advisers, that Abd's emissaries are busy in Italian North Africa. Italy's "natives" are in a chronic state of revolt. Abd's idea is to get them into the same general free-for-all with him—on his side, of course. And Italy owes money to the United States, too.

If Abd gets that far—and he's gone far enough already to prove himself some traveler—it's likely the trouble will spread into Egypt and maybe on into Arabia, where much the same kind of people live in North Africa. It would be more like Indian fighting that civilized warfare, but the whole stretch of country is difficult for military operations, which would cost like sin.

TRUE, the United States has no direct interest in all this. Nevertheless, the administration hates to see America's debtors getting into a mess which may cost them every cent they can rake and scrape for years to come.

BRADBURY'S CAR SMASHED; OTHER AUTO UNINJURED

On the top of a rise on the Merrill highway, near the Burrell Short ranch, there was stationed a truck. Two cars traveling toward each other met at the top of the rise with the truck between them. One car belonged to R. E. Bradbury. The other to Joe Pottus of San Francisco traveling for A. Schilling company.

Bradbury saw the Pottus' car and attempted to stop his car. But he couldn't owing to slippery road surface, and crashed simultaneously into the truck and Pottus.

Pottus car was not badly damaged. Bradbury's auto was severely damaged, the fenders crushed and the frame displaced.

INITIAL VOYAGE OF BARGE TO BE MADE ON EWAUNA

After more than a week's delay due to the inclemency of the weather, "Venedian" the dance barge, will make her maiden voyage on the waters of Lake Ewauna tonight, according to Johnny Houston, one of the company of Houston, Confor and Howard who are putting the barge over. For the late arrivals a miniature launch has been prepared to take them to the barge after she has been towed out into the middle of the lake.

On Tuesday night of next week, the baseball association has chartered the barge for a dance for the benefit of the baseball fund. Tickets are now being sold and it is expected to be one of the largest of the benefit dances of the season.

GANONG RETURNS TO FEDERAL HOSPITAL

After a visit of a week with his family, William N. Ganong left yesterday afternoon for Walla Walla, Wash., where he will again undergo treatment.

While here Mr. Ganong paid little attention to the official business transacted in the office of which he is head. Beyond several brief visits to the office during the evening he stayed home most of the time.

If reports of government physicians are such that his return to Klamath Falls by next fall would be impossible, Mr. Ganong will resign his position as district attorney. However, it is his hope that he will have sufficiently recovered to take up the duties of his office next fall.

Pretty Frock For Summer

ONE of the joys of summer is the opportunity it affords to wear a suit like this. One of pearl buttons with pearls and pearl buttons as the only trimming. The close fitting hat is of white felt.
