AGRICULTURAL SELF HELP

Our agricultural adjusts itself to changing conditions with reasonable speed in response to educative campaigns carried on through the department of agriculture. As an instance of this Secretary Jardine cites the fact that in six years we reduced our wheat acreage from 75,000,000 to 52,000,000 acres.

He would have the farmers kept informed as to market conditions so that they may adjust their acreages to the demand; he would have them carry on orderly marketing co-operatively, through standardization of their produce, balanced production and a scientific study of the wants of consumers.

There is no good reason he says, why a farmer should send to market eggs of various colors, sizes and ages, when consumers show a preference for eggs of one color, size and age, and are willing to pay well for their preference. It costs no more to raise hens that lay eggs of the same color and size than it does a flock that lays an unsorted product. The same principle applies to dairy products.

The secretary tells of two carloads of fat cattle sold in Kansas City recently; one car was of 3 year old steers which sold at $41 a head; the other of 2 year olds that sold at $91 a head. Both had been fed in about the same way; but the younger ones were of better blood and breeding. Too many people in Kansas, he says, are trying to raise the same kind of stock they raised in 1900 on land that has increased five times in value since that date.

Any farmer may of his own initiative stock his farm with better animals, he may make better butter, he may raise more crop to the acre, and he may sort his small products properly; but to get his fair share in the market he must be supported by his neighbor farmers in setting standards and selling standard goods in an "orderly" way, never glutting the market and always giving the consumer what he wants. In this way waste is eliminated, and waste, in any line of farming and farm marketing is the greatest bar to farm profits.—The Telegram.

Mystery Surrounds Unconscious Youth

ASTORIA, Ore., May 23.—Mystery hangs about the bed of a critically injured youth in St. Mary's hospital.

Found last evening lying beside the Columbia highway near the John Day river, five miles east of Astoria, the young man has been unable or unwilling to tell the officers more than his name is Pierce. He is suffering from crushed chest.

A clipping in his pocket tells of the assault by hi-jackers upon Jack Pierce near Oregon City last Monday night, and Sheriff Slusher was trying to ascertain whether the injured man is the same Pierce who was released from the Portland jail early this week and ordered to leave the Rose city.

The John Day river, near where Pierce was found by D. Hume, is a favorite spot for the transfer of smuggled liquor from rum-running motor boats to auto trucks.
