The Jabot Returns

Anna Q. Nilsson Wears a Frock Which Includes Fashion's Favorite of the Moment

Seasons come and go—and the styles which accompany them vary greatly. Here and there, however, a style favored in seasons past returns to find an equally warm welcome when adapted to the present mode.

The jabot, which was so much the vogue several seasons ago, is one of the present season's delights. Just now, however, it has returned with a new feeling of importance, for rather than becoming a mere ornamentation to the gown, it has become its chief figure, and the gown is frequently designed around the jabot.

The jabot, of course, may be small in style, and yet land a new and pleasing note to the costume. But the original to which is added when it falls in graceful lines down the entire front of the gown. Very happy color combinations are achieved by the use of the cascade jabot and one of the season's favorites is a red chiffon or crepe silk jabot lending a colorful and intriguing note to the navy blue frock of simple lines.
