AT THE LIBERTY

The Rocket-Lincoln Film company of Hollywood makes the announcement that a copy of their picture, "Abraham Lincoln," has been given the United States government for deposit in the Smithsonian institution, with the proviso that it be kept sealed until February 12, 2109, the three hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth.

The film, together with a modern projecting machine, with full instructions how to operate it, will be sealed in a steel vault, specially constructed to preserve the film and machine in perfect working order, and with these will be deposited a copy of the working script of the picture and a few copies of the best books on motion picture production and practice. The idea back of this is that in the 156 years to elapse between 1925 and 2109 tremendous changes will take place in motion picture production and exhibition, and the donors of the Lincoln picture will take every precaution to insure the proper exhibition of their picture in 2109.

AT THE PINE TREE

To the world at large the mention of "Weberfields" means years and years of delightful, vigorous, enthusiastic comedy—a national institution. To the stage the name means even more. They were, in truth, the originators of the pie-throwing gag.

Charlie Chaplin may start suit in the high courts of law claiming some imitator has "stolen his thunder" but in stating his case Charlie must be careful not to claim authorship for the pie-throwing trick for which he has become famous.

Weber and Fields started throwing pies long before Charlie knew there was such a thing as a stage, much less a screen. The stunt's birth is a simple story, quickly told. When the drama "The Conquerors" was running in New York, Weber and Fields presented at their Music Hall an uproarious travesty called "The Conquerors."

In the original the "heavy" had commanded the heroine to drink a glass of wine. Instead she dashed it in his face. In the Weberfields version, Charley Ross, the villain of the piece, ordered his wife, Mabel Fenton, the girl, to eat a custard pie of her own making, a fat, juicy, extra thick custard. She threw it in his face Charlie Chaplin was then but a cockney lad of nine.

It was Weber, too, who first wore a steel wig and padded pantaloons that his anatomy might withstand the terrific blows dealt him by the deadly cane of Lew Fields, and it was Fields who first sank a hatchet in a layer of cork between the hair and steel wig—tricks that have since become commonplace on the stage.

Weber and Fields are bringing their comedy to the screen for the first time in "Friendly Enemies," a picturization of the famous Broadway success of the same name. The picture, now playing at the Pine Tree theater, where it will remain for two days, gives this great team no end of opportunities for splendid comedy and dramatic work.
