Unveil Portrait Of Young Coolidge

MERCERSBURG, Pa., June 2.- (A.P.)-William Mann Irvine, head master of Mercersburg Academy, in an address today at the unveiling of a portrait of the late Calvin Coolidge, Jr., paid a beautiful tribute to youth and the memory of the departed boy.

The unveiling was a part of the commencement week activities. The younger son of President and Mrs. Coolidge, who died in Washington July 7, last year, would have been graduated from Mercersburg tomorrow.

"Today," said Dr. Irvine, "we honor youth, beautiful youth, consecrated youth, ideal youth, youth that won our admiration and deepest love.

"This hour might be colored by regret and sorrow but our spirits rise in joy and exaltation because this, our dear boy whom we delight to honor, although only in his teens, glorified many of the most noble qualities of the human soul. By his life so eager, so faithful, so beautiful, he showed that youth is not a prelude; it is as much a part of life as manhood or old age. "A good boy is a true interpreter of life. What he lives is more than what he says."

"To us in Mercersburg, Calvin Coolidge, Jr., will always be, in Shakespeare's phrase, 'A boy eternal.' About his portrait will gather the story of lofty motives and good deeds by Mercersburg boys all over the world. As generations of boys look at his calm, true, manly face, they will form high resolve to 'live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the king.'"
