MYERS HAS RESIGNED

Assistant District Attorney Myers has resigned. He has resigned "to fight The Evening Herald." Well, he has not undertaken a very big contract, for The Evening Herald never fights anyone or anything. Its policy has always been one of peace and harmony and we are a little surprised that anyone—even Mr. Myers—should dignify us as of sufficient consequence as to throw aside the habiliments and particularly the emoluments of office just to fight The Evening Herald. It is a new experience to us and one we may enjoy.

He promises to bring a suit against The Evening Herald for some statement or other that has appeared in these columns, the nature of which we must wait to learn until the suit is filed. We hope, however, that when it is brought it will be in such shape as will enable us to gain knowledge of the identity of "Madam T." as well as just what was done with all of the prohibition fund. It will save us the necessity of going before the grand jury and asking for an investigation.

At the PINE TREE

If you found your wife away when you returned home unexpectedly—

If she lied about the reason for her absence and you discovered her untruthfulness—

If you found a note in her purse which you thought cast doubt on the parentage of your child—

If she refused to give any explanation—

Would you trust her?

These questions confronted the character of Ramon Martinez in "Jealous Husbands." The picture shows tonight at the Pine Tree theater. How to settle his doubts makes an absorbing photoplay.

Harold Bell Wright, the most popular living author, as proven by the statement of his publishers that his books during the past ten years have been read by over 56,000,000 people throughout the world, began life as a poor lad.

He inherited his unusual practicality from his father, who was a carpenter. From his mother he was endowed with true artistry. To himself, alone, however, does he owe his triumph in reaching the pinnacle of fame in the literary world. He was first a house painter and afterwards a preacher before he was moved by purely public welfare desires to become a writer. One of the most noted of his works is "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent." It deals with a man made great by love. This book was recently translated to the screen. The film version, personally supervised by Wright, is of the same title and retains all of the wonderful human interest and thrilling suspense of the novel. "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" will be the powerful super-feature at the Pine Tree theater on Sunday.

For thirty years before the Erich von Stroheim expedition into Death Valley to film closing scenes of "Greed," which comes to the Pine Tree theater Tuesday, Skiddoo was just an abandoned ghost city on the edge of the hottest and driest desert waste in the world.

It is the only ghost city which has ever staged a "come back," for Stroheim's party converted it into a bustling motion picture colony, and for two weeks it was used as a base of operations, before the trip into Death Valley itself for the final scenes.

Skiddoo was built around 1890 by thousands of gold seekers, who erected houses and carried lumber and furnishings up tortuous trails in the Panamint mountains. Then, when they found themselves unable to fight longer against the desert's scorching death traps, gave up, and fled, family by family, leaving the town standing with houses furnished.

Scotty on the Job

Death Valley Scotty, who knows more than any other living man about Death Valley's pitfalls, was von Stroheim's guide from the town of Koeler into the Panamint range, to the exact location described in Frank Norris' novel "McTeague," from which "Greed" was adapted. The von Stroheim expedition, which included 50 persons, on the whole took the most hazardous trip ever attempted for the sake of screen realism.

Motors carried tents, blankets and other camping conveniences with the party until it was forced to take to foot, and travel under such hardships that the two leading actors, Gibson Gowland and Jean Hersholt, each weighing 200 pounds, lost 50 pounds each by the time the finish-fight scenes were made.

At the LIBERTY

An almost uncontrollable fear of riding in an automobile at more than 15 miles an hour lost a millionaire business man his fiancée. How he turned bandit and became fearless in his effort to win the girl back but got instead a prettier girl to replace his now married fiancée who married another man is told in "The Meddler," featuring William Desmond, which will show at the Liberty theater tonight.

Jack Bannister risked a shot for a kiss, the revolver being held in the hand of an alluring South American beauty. Then his troubles began and though she scorned him for a time she gave him the title of "Don Dars Devil," which, by the way, is the title of the newest Blue Streak Western which is coming Sunday to the Liberty theater, with Jack Hoxie as the star.

Langell Folks to Celebrate

June 21 Date of Big Barbecue and Other Features

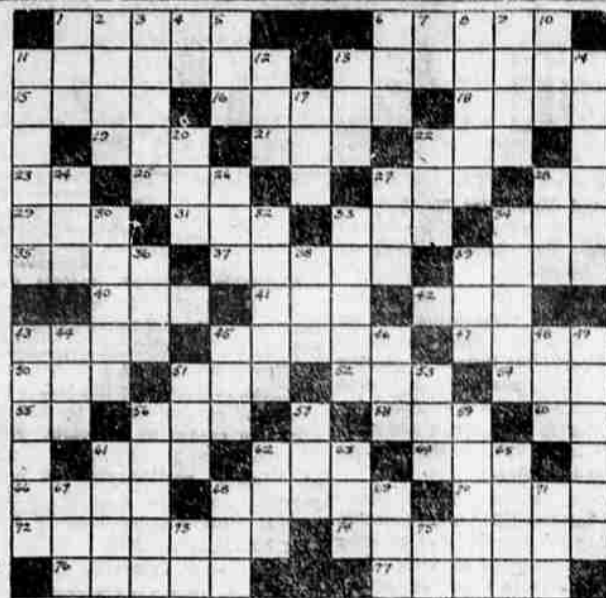

The Langell Valley Barbecue celebration which is to be held in Langell Valley on Sunday, June 21st is being looked forward to with keen interest by the Owens Valley people according to a letter received from one of the residents of Owens Valley by G. P. Keller, secretary of the Langell Valley Community club in which the interest in the Langell Valley country is shown from the fact that crowd is planning on being present from Owens Valley for the Barbecue celebration.

The committee in charge is making extensive preparations to handle a large crowd as two prime steers and a large hog are on the bill of fare. Chief Davis who had charge of the meats last year will again take care of the meats.

Lamm's Mill To Get Baby Clinic

A second baby clinic will be conducted in Klamath county on Wednesday, June 17th, at Lamm's mill. The clinic is being fostered by the P. T. A. of that community of which Mrs. E. L. Dixon is president and Mrs. H. D. Crump acting secretary. The clinic will be held at the home of Mrs. E. L. Dixon.

The physical examinations will be conducted by Dr. G. S. Newsom and his staff of the public health unit.

These clinics are being conducted by the local health unit in the same manner as those which have been conducted here in the past three years by Dr. Estella Ford Warner of the State Bureau of Child Hygiene. Dr. Warner is now with the "Child Health Demonstration" at Salem and the state has no special medical director to conduct the baby clinics over the state this year.

Community desiring baby clinics held in their locality should make their request to Dr. G. S. Newsom of the health unit, at the county court house.
