STOREKEEPING ON TOP OF THE WORLD

Charles D. Brower conducts the general store at Point Barrow, that northernmost horn of the American continent. The store is a recognized northern institution—and so is Charley Brower. He has been in the Arctic for forty-one years. You could not drag him back to warmth and civilization with walrus thongs and reindeer teams. The North Pole is his neighbor and the Eskimo his clientele.

There are some 600 Eskimos in Brower's district. After two-score years among these people Brower has a pretty good idea of what they like best. Their fondness for gum drops is no myth. The Barrow store keeps a full line of assorted colors. They also demand the hard candy of violent complexions which appear in our store windows around Christmas time.

The Eskimos are devoted patrons of Mr. Wrigley. There is this difference between their ruminations and those of their paler brothers—the Eskimo never tires of the confection. Even after the gum has lost everything but its elasticity he continues placidly with his chewing. From time to time he adds to and sweetens the quid as his wealth allows. Thus the hunters' cheeks become distended by enormous masses of chicle. Often a particularly distinguished chew will be bartered about from hand to hand—or from mouth to mouth.

Those who still smoke pipes have strange and awful ways of stretching their supplies of tobacco. All sorts of amazing adulterations are used. A favorite artifice is to mix reindeer hair with their smoking—they say it puts more kick into the tobacco.

Stewart's Washington Letter

By CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Earthquakes aren't hard to forecast. A bit of study's necessary, that's all. Predictions can't be quite as accurate as the weather bureau's, perhaps. That is, they can't be pinned down to specific dates.

However, they usually can be made within a matter of months. They can be made, too, a good deal farther in advance than weather predictions can.

This is the testimony of experts like the hydrographic office's, the coast and geodetic survey's, the bureau of standards' and the Smithsonian and Carnegie institutions'. These scientists do no wild guessing, make no forecasts on the strength of anything but information have excellent reason to consider reliable.

Selamology's progress has been very rapid recently, owing to perfection of the sonic depth finder by Dr. Harvey C. Hayes of the naval research laboratory, near Washington.

Previously deep sea sounding had been such slow work that scientists couldn't keep up with changes in ocean depths. With Dr. Hayes' device it is done as rapidly as a fast ship can steam, so that a day-by-day record is possible, if desired.

That's just what science does require—maybe not literally day-by-day, but frequently—to know of coming quakes. Earth shifts which produce big shakeups occur pretty rapidly, once they start.

We think of geological changes as taking ages, and no doubt the processes responsible for them are very slow, but when the time comes for a readjustment nature works fast.

Indeed, the quakes themselves testify to this theory's correctness—they certainly are abrupt enough.

However, there are advance warnings. A ship equipped with the Hayes sounding device charts the ocean floor in the autumn, say, and off Santa Barbara.

The following spring she takes fresh soundings and finds deeper water in some places than before. The best guess is that a submarine fault has slipped.

Something like a rubber ball, the earth, pressed down in one spot, tends to rise somewhere else.

It's up to the investigators, having discovered a point where a downward pressure evidently is being exerted, to determine where the corresponding upward tilt is to be expected.

By following the line of the fault this isn't difficult to do—and quite exactly.

Mrs. Laura Moore Remembers Scribes

Mrs. Laura Moore of the Point Comfort resort is an ardent advocate of fifty-fifty reciprocity. In gratitude for stray bits of news which the Evening Herald force have given her resort from time to time, Mrs. Moore this morning reciprocated with a ten pound trout, measuring 20 inches.

Over the week-end Mrs. Moore had over 135 guests at the resort, which is one of the picturesque spots of this section, where fishing, boating, swimming and all out door sports are enjoyed throughout the summer months. According to Mrs. Moore, anyone, even though they have never fished before, could not help but get a catch a time resort, where large ones, such as she brought from the resort this morning, are being caught daily.

Council Discusses New Building Code

In an effort to draw up a building code for Klamath Falls, which would insure the city of substantial building in the business section of town, four members of the city council met at the city hall last night with M. B. Riley of Portland to discuss what form the code should take.

Mr. Riley, who was instrumental in drawing up a building code for Portland and also for Yakima, Wash., gave the councilmen expert advice on the question.

"It will be a very difficult task to draw up a satisfactory building code," Councilman E. H. Balsiger said today. "There is a wealth of detail work that must be attended to before the instrument is ready. The council feels that Klamath Falls has arrived at the point where a building code is necessary."

New Bridge to Span River at Malone Ranch

Replacement of Old Structure to Start in Langell's Valley

Construction will soon start on a new county bridge to cross Lost river at Malone's ranch near Langell's valley post office. It was announced today by County Road Engineer Frank Z. Howard.

Inspection of the proposed project was made by Mr. Howard yesterday and within the next few days a temporary structure to take care of traffic until the permanent span is built, will be constructed.

The old Malone bridge collapsed last month under the weight of a herd of horses.

Tom Dixon, road master, had just driven across the bridge and made an inspection. So rotten were the supports that he immediately started driving to Klamath Falls to ask the county court to condemn and close the bridge. Dust from his automobile had hardly settled in the neighborhood of the bridge when a herd of horses trotted across the structure.

With a preliminary creaking as the only warning, the span suddenly gave way and the horses were precipitated into the river. Four horses were drowned and the rest managed to swim to shore.
