OPEN SEASON FOR STRAW HATS

Now its the open season for straw hats, and on Fifth Avenue and on Main Street they show which way the trade winds blow. But during the closed season their manufacturers have shown to the Census Bureau that the annual sales reach a total of more than $32,000,000. Straw hats are made in ninety-six factories, with an invested capital of $80,000,000. The New England States, New York, California, Missouri, Illinois, Maryland, and New Jersey are the principal producers.

The annual production has increased from a value of $10,000,000 in 1904 to $25,000,000 in 1914, and to $32,500,000 in 1923. From 1904 to 1923 the population increased 33 per cent, but the value of the hats rose more than 200 per cent, indicating the buying of more or better hats for every head. Straw for hats is imported, chiefly from Japan, China, and Italy in the form of "braids."

Our straw-hat factories are kept going by American heads, inside and outside the works, for though men may dodge a poll tax, few have the face to beat the usual summer "overhead."

Stewart's Daily Letter

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Extraterritoriality!

Try saying it. It can be done, of course—by most people. But mighty few can say it "on high." A vast majority have to throttle down and feel their way.

What I mean is:

Can you come to "extraterritoriality" unexpectedly, in the middle of a sentence, and take it uninterruptedly and go right on, without a pause or a backward glance or a passing thought that you topped that enunciated burden in pretty good style?

I'll take the negative on all bets offered, and win by a wide margin in the long run.

To illustrate. Here's the opening sentence in a letter from President Green of the American Federation of Labor to President Coolidge of the United States. See if you can read it rapidly and distinctly, clearly pronouncing every word, from start to finish.

"On behalf of the American labor movement I wish to urge for your favorable consideration and speedy action that the United States take the initiative in calling an international conference to make plans to abolish extraterritoriality in China."

Saying "extraterritoriality" is a serious problem at the state department right now. Chinese troubles have been uppermost there for several weeks and "extraterritoriality" their keynote. In many experts' opinion, so it has to be talked about half the time.

Some of the department folk, by constant effort and application, have got it down pretty pat. Some have trouble with it every time. A few can't say it at all.

It's delayed business appreciably, if the efficiency bureau, which is deeply concerned in such matters, is to be believed. Delay's inefficient. So the bureau asks, "Why not abandon the darn word? In future let's say 'extraterritorial rights.'"

You gotta hand it to that bureau. It does think up the brightest things.

Here we are again, which is no more than right, for if you don't start it's a cinch you'll never finish and finishing is the best part of this idea.

Happened to be sitting in one of the prominent barber shops the other day, when I walked a bearded old codger. Bearded is right; he gave the appearance of just sticking his head out of a fern pot. He sat down in the chair next to mine, and the barber, who is quite a local wit, asked him how he would have his moustache trimmed. The old fellow looked at him for a minute, then said, "In silence." I suppose I'll have to plead guilty to insane laughter, but there seems to be a superabundance of barbers who have the longest line of uninvited conversation in the world, that it does your heart good to have one of them quieted.

A fellow from New Brunswick says that he prefers jail to his wife.

Clear from New Brunswick comes the tale

Of a man who would much rather stay in jail

Than to take a chance for the rest of his life

By living at home with a high-tempered wife.

He divorced her thirty years ago. To pay him of twenty a week or so. Now that's not much for a week or two.

But what if you're paying it right straight through.

Think now of paying that every week!

No wonder the future looked dull and bleak.

He says, "That's not so much money I guess.

But a lot of cash for a murmured 'YES.'"

The Elks are once more back in town, leaving the convention of some renown, in Portland nearly a week ago, and from what they say, things weren't so slow. Also noticed along my way that the parking space grows less each day, along in front of the Central school. But why do they sit there? It isn't cool. I suppose it's a pretty hard habit to break, to sit there all day about half awake. It looks like a rather hard place to sit, but the loafers don't seem to mind it a bit. And it isn't peculiar to that one spot, for look in the court yard, and like as not there'll be just as many, or maybe more. I hope this don't make those fellows sore. Because it seems from my point of view, that that is pleasanter much to do than to trot around in the red hot sun, they're lucky when all is said and done. I noticed, too, that the kids, to play, go down to the play grounds every day and that, altho it is rather cool, they wouldn't mind a small swimming pool. What's the matter with building them one, it insures the kids some good clean fun.

About those city signs, we ought to have them pretty soon. Asked for them enough. That reminds me of the missionary who, during the course of his stay abroad had made so many appeals that the church saw fit to refuse the last one. A week later they received the following: "This isn't an appeal, this is a report. I have no pants." Something like Klamath: it has no signs. Hope the preacher got off as well as it looks like the city will.

There is a saying that goes "There shall come a time when last shall be first." Right about that time these lines will head the column.

New York Twirler Made Defendant in Suit for Divorce; Winner of Beauty Contest Is Co-Respondent

NEW YORK, July 25. (AP)—Hugh McQuillan, pitcher for the New York Giants was today made defendant in a reparation action filed by his wife, Mrs. Nellie T. McQuillan of Elmhurst. Mrs. McQuillan named Miss Helen Goebel of the Bronx, chosen last year in a beauty contest, as "Miss Bronx," as the other woman involved.

Mrs. McQuillan declared that her husband's success in baseball was a factor in the disruption of their married life, and that he had been transformed from a home loving, considerate husband, to "a brute and habitual drunkard."

They were married at Worcester, Mass., April 27, 1917.

"During the first five years of our married life," Mrs. McQuillan's affidavit says "our marital relations were of the happiest, naive and my husband departed himself as a gentleman, in fact his deportment was without a blemish. When he was with the Boston baseball club his salary was $3500 a year for a five month season. He was always a gentleman and spent his time with me. I truly believe that we were perfectly happy. Then he was sold to the New York baseball club, the Giants. His salary as a professional player began climbing until now for five months services he receives $9000. In addition to this he receives his share for percent (in the world series). I have been informed that his share of the proceeds of the series has been in the neighborhood of $12,000 for the past three seasons."

McQuillan is in Boston where the Giants are playing the Boston Braves.
