The Excellence of Dress

Is a distinction that is afforded but few men. It implies that the man thus distinguished has selected, not so much fabrics of cost but, clothes that fit his form in every detail. He is a man of discriminating taste; he has chosen the eminence of a cloth tailored to suit the peculiarities of his build. Preferred a material that matches the style and pattern. The advantages of such dress can not be over estimated. The confidence installed in the minds of the well tailored insures their favorable acceptance in circles where appearance and abilities count. The selective mind that discerns clothes of superior merit insures to the native ability.

Such excellence can only be insured in tailor-made suits.—They cost no more.
