Excavating On Miller's Land Is Under Way

Building May Go Up On Main Street Property Soon

Preliminary ground work, preparatory to the construction of a new building on Main street, between Second and Third, has commenced with the activity of a steam shovel on the Main street property recently acquired by W. D. Miller, contractor.

Approached on the subject of a new building, Mr. Miller admitted yesterday that the purpose of the excavation was to get the property in shape for a building that he plans to construct.

"But there is nothing definite," he said. "I don't know what kind of a building it will be, when it will be built or how."

When Miller purchased the property from the Hamaker estate several months ago he admitted that he planned to construct a building on the property and the excavation now in progress is merely carrying that plan forward.

No plans for the new building have yet been drawn. It is understood that the structure, if built, will go up next spring.

BAD CORNER ON MAIN WILL SOON BE ELIMINATED

Through the activities of the Concrete Pipe company, the so called slaughter of two birds with one stone is now in progress.

On Main street, the main thoroughfare of the city, there is a bad corner, a jog in the street between 1st and 2nd. Vision of motorists is obscured at this job by a small bluff that juts out to the sidewalk line.

Some time ago, Jack Knowles, owner of the local concern, purchased this property and immediately became cognizant of the fact that the bluff would be excellent material for concrete.

So now a force of men is at work tearing down the bluff and carrying the rock to the Concrete Pipe company where it is made into concrete.

And second, but not least, is the fact that within a short time a dangerous corner will be a thing of the past because that rocky bluff that interfered with the vision of the motorist will be eliminated.

Oregon Trunk line, interceded at this point.

"We have agreed to build that line jointly with the Southern Pacific," he said, "but they have not seemed to favor the proposition."

First Visit Since 1913
This is Mr. Budd's first visit to the Klamath territory since 1913.

During the construction of the Oregon Trunk railroad up the Deschutes river canyon to Bend, he was an engineer for the railroad and as such made frequent trips into Klamath.

He recalled that it was the original intention 13 years ago to build south into Klamath and on to California and spoke of passing several clearings made by survey crews in northern Klamath, that he had noticed today.

Completing Old Project
"But you see construction stopped for some reason or other and then the war came on and the project was abandoned," he remarked. "Now we are pushing forward again as far as Klamath Falls and one of our arguments that will be advanced to the interstate commerce commission, will be that the extension from Bend to Klamath Falls, that we are proposing, is but the completion of a project started years before."

Asked whether he believed the railroad, if built into Klamath would be a remunerative enterprise from the start, Mr. Budd answered that he couldn't make any prediction.

Tonnage Here
"The tonnage is here, and whether it materializes immediately or several years hence, matters little. Lumber is a product that is always in demand and it must be cut some time. We don't always figure on spur extensions paying immediately."

"These manufacturers that will build in Klamath Falls if we are allowed to build, are big concerns and I doubt whether they will bid seriously for the box shop business in California. They will be more interested in manufacturing the clear lumber and bidding for the eastern market."

Here for Inspection
Mr. Budd is in Klamath for the express purpose of making a brief but comprehensive inspection of the Klamath situation, and planned to leave this afternoon for Portland.

He was accompanied by his son, Robert Budd, and the two S. P. & S. engineers.

You know — if we used the finest type that money could buy and had it inked to perfection, and the printing was done on orange wrappers, the effect wouldn't be worth a darn — would it? That is the reason we are always talking better paper.

State Club Leader Here on Inspection

Activities and programs of county clubs were inspected today by H. C. Seymour, state leader of county clubs, who arrived here last night to confer with County Club Leader Frank Sexton.

Mrs. Seymour, who is on the road much of the time, is a visitor of Klamath Falls several times each year and spends several days here visiting county clubs and advising with Mr. Sexton concerning the local work.

Mr. Seymour is greatly pleased over the progress of Klamath clubs and cites the 100 per cent record set up by Klamath clubs last year as an example of what can be done when county clubs become interested in their work.
