Simplicity Predominates in Baby's Clothes

The beauty of childhood is its simplicity, which should be kept firmly in mind when selecting the baby's wardrobe.

One occasionally sees a tiny baby, often at the walking age, staggering under an array of ribbons, laces, flounces, and what not, so that one loses sight of the child and sees only its clothes.

For the tiny baby the plain slip of firm material, capable of being laundered frequently, is the first choice for a dress. It may have a few very fine tucks, an edge at neck and sleeves of narrow soft lace and feather stitching. It needs nothing more.

An essential to good health is the Munsing infant's double breasted wrapper, wool mixed, at $1., $1.35. All wool $1.45.
