"They talk about a woman's sphere as if it had a limit. There's not a place on earth or heaven. There's not a task to mankind given. There's not a blessing or a woe; There's not a whisper "yes" or "no"; There's not a life, a death, a birth; There's not a feather's weight of worth without a woman in it."

I ALWAYS think of life as of the four seasons—Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. Youth is Spring, beautiful in a dazzling but soul-less fashion. Summer and the warmth of maturity, the years leading to the physical charm the light of character seem, in my mind, to have a common metaphorical basis.

Most of us reach the autumn of our lives but few the winter. In these periods the character and the light soul touch lightly the faces around us and we feel in every kind elderly face, beauty of a far more charming sort. I do not think that beauty is a thing confined to youth alone. There is physical beauty, handsome features and strong perfect bodies—and the beauty of character which unlike the former must be acquired. Youth of course claims the beauty of the physical, and rightly, when merely the physical side is considered. But age and the happy hours of retrospect, exemplifies the latter. The memories and glories of a life well spent lead a much deeper and fascinating expression than the radiance and brilliance of youth.

In after years the beauty of the flesh alone fades like the dying flower but in its stead comes the kindly glow of character and the sweet expression of a beautiful soul.

The secret of growing old beautifully, when beauty of the sort I have described is the object, is very simple. If a pleasant outlook on life is maintained through the years and the soul basks in the pleasant sunshine of kindness, it is inevitable that the autumn and winter of life will be beautiful. In other words—to secure beauty and contentment in old age, be kind and tolerant and not cranky and disagreeable. It is just as easy to be agreeable and kind to everyone.

As the days grow shorter and the nights grow longer, we realize that fall is here, the young people in a few short days will be wending their way to the schoolroom. Many of the homes are a bit lonely with the departure of loved ones, who are off to school or returning to their own homes after their summer vacation.

For the girl off to college, the prospect is pleasant. She will meet new friends, live in a new atmosphere and enjoy some of the gaiety which only exists "away at school." Traveling, clothes, friends, new experiences, study under specialists, pranks and frolics, parties and proms all make the lot of the college girl one to be envied. She may almost weep her heart away from loneliness and homesickness during the first few strange weeks, but if she can once outlast that period the remainder of her course will be pure joy.

Soon holidays will come bringing with them rounds of gaiety, visiting friends and pleasant times. The pleasure of having them back again will almost be worth the pain of having been separated from them for so many weeks.
