PENDLETON, Ore., Sept. 11.—Profits in the sheep business at present absolutely do not warrant any such increase in fees as that recommended in congress in the Raftord report providing for as high as 200 per cent increase in parts of this area, according to testimony offered at the senate public lands hearing held here yesterday afternoon.

Ernest Johnson, big sheepman of Wallawa, stated that such an increase as that recommended by the report would take away the margin of profit now permitted the sheepmen and would result in confiscation of their holdings.

The profits in the sheep business at present are sufficient to pay wages to the operator, and eight per cent on the investment, according to land. By doing so they technically completed their flight.

Even after their skipper had dropped off to sleep, the members of his crew continued their praise.

"stood all watches," one of them said of Rodgers. "He wouldn't sleep. He bucked us up every minute, and when we looked like we might be getting down hearted he told us about men he knew who had floated fifteen days clinging to a log."

Otis Stantz, the radio operator of the seaplane, broke in there with: "Yes and when we almost made the coast of Oahu and were carried on by the wind he was cheerful about it. He merely grinned at our luck and said he would sail for Kaula, as it was the best island anyway."

Rodgers told us he was confident he could sail our plane right into Naw-

Prof. E. L. Pattor, head of the department of animal husbandry of Oregon agriculture college. He expressed the belief that present fees are as high as they should be for the sheep men. Cattle men are not making any profits on the basis of the present fees charged, he pointed out.

fit will harbor so he tore off the fabric from the lower wing and kinder us about our sailing right up to Nawilwili docks."

Put to Sleep
Navy physicians interrupted the apparently endless stories of the four men when they became excited and showed the first nervous reactions of their nine-days vigil although they wanted to tell more about Rodgers and his "Capers," they were given sleeping potions and put to bed, where they quickly dropped into an exhausted slumber.

At the temporary radio station near the harbor sat a neat and trim young officer, awaiting a reply to a message he had sent the commandant at Pearl Harbor, Oahu, the big Hawaiian naval station. His message had said:

"Can I proceed Pearl Harbor. I can do nothing further here."
The sender was Lieutenant Donald Osborn, Jr., commander of the submarine R-4, which made the rescue and towed Rodgers and his crew to land. He seemed very interested in the magazine he was reading.

The five aviators will be permitted to sleep unmolested all day today.

LIHUE, Island of Kaula, Sept. 11.—Commander John Rodgers, in statements to brother officers and friends after breakfast this morning gave an account of what happened the fateful Tuesday when his plane was forced down in the Pacific.

In all his comments Commander Rodgers praised highly the fortitude of his comrades, referring to his own activities with extreme modesty. He said the fact that the plane was lost after it had landed probably was due to a misunderstanding of radio signals from the aircraft tender Argostook then stationed 300 miles north of Lahuana.

Radio operator Stantz probably suffered the greatest. He was near the point of exhaustion on various occasions. Though he stuck to his post heroically, he suffered not only from lack of food and water, but greatly nauseated by the sea. Every movement he made became a torture.

Commander Rodgers and Lieutenant Connell were more concerned today about the condition of their ship than anything else. They were particularly anxious over the plans for towing the seaplane to Pearl Harbor. Lieutenant Connell desires to accompany the plane to the navy base but his physician has forbidden him to make such a trip.

Members of the crew of the U. S. S. Melville, which will carry the aviators to Pearl Harbor, furnished the five men with fresh linen and dungarees where they arose this morning.

Never Gave Up

The fliers at no time gave up hope of their ultimate rescue or of making a possible landing somewhere in the islands, one of the crew said this morning. The general feeling was that they would reach Kaula. One of the aviators jokingly said that Commander Rodgers had deliberately steered for Kaula instead of Oahu because he had so many friends on the Garden Isle.

Commander Rodgers' father, Admiral John A. Rodgers, is understood to have been lost once for a considerable period, while on a polar expedition. That was the reason the flight commander's mother insisted that he take with him on this flight a small water still.

The fliers still had emergency rations when rescued, but said they had lost their desire to eat. During the last 2 days at sea, they said they had tried to eat the canned beef they brought with them, but were unable to retain it. The lack of food, they declared, bothered them less than the lack of water. Tobacco they had only in small quantities, which were carefully preserved and rationed.
