man interests to see if they had any projects in mind that would conflict with his plans.

No Conflict.
"I went even farther," he said. "I asked if they proposed at any time in the future to build parallel lines or competing routes; I was fearful of something like this in the future, but all told me 'no.'"

"I had hoped to put on the map our development work in central and southern Oregon before the Natron Cutoff was started, thinking it would be a long time before this proposed line was built. But herein I was mistaken, as the work started long before I thought it would."

He said that he used to be an enthusiastic dry farming supporter, because a few years ago in the Fort Rock valley and other dry districts, there were miles upon miles of growing grain and hay.

"But this was caused by unusual rainfall in that country then," he explained. "But during the past five years these sections have been desolate, caused by long drouths and late frosts."

Strahorn said the Oregon, California and Eastern was organized by him October 5, 1915, with a capitalization of $100,000. He defrayed all expenses at first, but sometime later the capital was increased to $1,000,000.

Alturas Extension.
Slaughnessy stated that by the building of the Klamath Falls to Alturas line, a new transcontinental railway route would be given to the northwest. He likewise favored the petition asking for the standardizing of the Nevada, California and Oregon road running from Wendell, California, to Lakeview.

Slaughnessy declared that "the granting of the C. P. S. P. applications will insure the early completion of a north and south line on the eastern slope of the Cascade and Sierra Nevada ranges from Los Angeles to Portland, which will be of great importance as a strategic line in case of war."

He also stated that the building of the proposed Southern Pacific lines would give Nevada an entrance for her products into the Portland and Seattle markets.

Northern Lines Finish.
The case of the Northern lines was brought to a conclusion this morning with testimony of cattlemen and others who favored the extension of the Oregon Trunk from Bend to Klamath Falls.

Judge R. H. Bunnell, Klamath county farmer, declared the proposed extension would open districts now isolated. "We appreciate what the Southern Pacific is doing for us," he said "but we want competition."

Mr. Biggs and C. W. Foster, Prineville cattlemen and W. U. Sanderson, owner of the Baldwin sheep company near Madras, told of the advantages the road would bring in aiding cattlemen to market their stock.

A. R. Moneskey, Portland sheep dealer, said the line would release the Klamath district from the grip of California buyers, who can now take advantage of the fact that the Klamath growers have no other outlet.

Other Witnesses.
J. I. Stearns, Prineville cattleman, declared the Oregon Trunk would greatly aid Central Oregon livestock raisers who summered stock in the Post Klamath country.

County Agent Tucker, of Prineville, stated many settlers are needed on irrigation projects and that Crook county wants the Oregon Trunk because it would aid colonization and stimulate dairying, poultry raising and general farming.

George Brewster, Redmond manager of an irrigation district, said the Oregon Trunk must be allowed to extend in order "to fill our districts and to furnish us an outlet to the California markets."

Mrs. Alva McMickle, the only woman to testify told of the benefits that would come with the extended Oregon Trunk. She is chairman of the transportation committee of the Redmond chamber of commerce.

"It would broaden our market, and give us a real consuming market," she said.

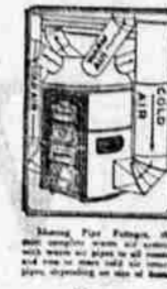

E. E. Agee, creamery operator at Redmond was the last witness for the Northern lines.

Numerous witnesses from Klamath Falls and Bend appeared before Examiner Mahaffie yesterday afternoon in behalf of the Oregon Trunk application.

Bend People Appear.
Judge R. W. Sawyer, R. S. Hamilton member of the state legislature, and W. C. Wilkes, Bend merchant, declared the extension south would open new markets for products of the country about Bend. They said

Christy Mathewson Loses Out In Battle With White Plague

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 8. —(P)—Christy Mathewson, one of the greatest pitchers of all time, is dead in his mountain camp.

A hero of the world war as of the diamond, on which he was the first big college star, he died late last night of tuberculosis and pneumonia, the result of being gassed while a captain in the chemical warfare service in France. The end came while his buddies in the American Legion were holding their annual convention in Omaha, and while Walter Johnson, his greatest contemporary, was being hailed as the hero in a world's series, such as Mathewson had been in the past.

"Big Six," as he was known because of his stature, battled intermittently with tuberculosis for six years. He went to France in 1918 after three years as manager of the Cincinnati Reds, returning as coach of the New York Giants, with whom he had played for 17 seasons. He was taken seriously ill in 1920 and retired to Saranac Lake.

The battle for health apparently won in 1923, he became president and part owner of the Boston Braves. He caught cold on the spring training trip of the Braves last spring and was forced to return to his camp. Less than a month ago his physician reported that he was holding his own. The end came rapidly and unexpectedly. His wife, who had nursed him during the years of his illness, was at his bedside. The only child, Christy Mathewson, Jr., is at college. Funeral services will be held at Lewiston, Pa., Saturday. His body will be taken from Saranac Lake tonight.

How Matty's zeal for his country's aid led to the illness that ends his career prematurely at 45 is explained by Mrs. Mathewson.

"He had influenza in France," she said. "Besides, as assistant gas officer to the twenty-eighth division, he demonstrated lethal gas shells and inhaled much of the gas. When he came back, the severe cold he developed settled into a cough he could not shake off."

Columbus Day Legal Holiday On October 12

Public Offices and Bank Will be Closed Next Monday

Klamath will pause next Monday and pay tribute to he who discovered America, Christopher Columbus. Columbus day, October 12, is to be a legal holiday. There will be no banks open, nor will public offices in the court house or city hall be able to transact city business.

The city council cannot hold its session because its official business cannot be transacted on a legal holiday. So the council will probably hold a meeting Tuesday night.

Columbus day, although a legal holiday, is not a school holiday. Regular classes will be held in county and city grade and high schools.

However it will be the aim of all teachers of the county schools to direct the day's lessons toward the discovery of America and a general discussion of circumstances that led Christopher Columbus to risk his life in his attempt to discover a new land.

COOLIDGE RETURNS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—President Coolidge returned to the White House early today from Omaha, Neb., where he attended the American Legion convention.
