WASHINGTON.—Note well Ralph Beaver Strassburger of Pennsylvania.

Outside his own state, who knew anything of him prior to the spring of 1924? Nobody but his personal friends.

He could see that President Coolidge was going to get first place but the vice presidential nomination seemed to be available.

Well, he didn't get it. He wasn't even a strong contender.

Nevertheless he made an impression. Starting from absolutely nowhere, he got himself mentioned as one of the candidates.

Nor had his campaign been altogether ridiculous. One thing, if nothing else, redeemed from that.

Reports have reached here of republican factional trouble in Indiana. They caused anxiety concerning the 1924 chances of Senator Watson.

What was wanted—and looked for—from Jackson was an appointment calculated to bring the factions together.

The impression prevails here that he deliberately chose a weak sister, politically, with an eye to his own chances next year.

This nettled Strassburger, who called on Secretary Kellogg to protest but got no satisfaction.

WASHINGTON.—The administration is mad clear through—at Edward Jackson, Hoosier governor.

Administration men thought the death of Indiana's democratic senator, Samuel M. Ralston, would strengthen them in the upper house.

Confusing, to say the least, is the general verdict.

The one nice thing about one kind of cheese is you can't tell when it is spoiled.
