At The LIBERTY

Posed on the parapet of a country mansion, Lorraine Livingston was about to be dashed to the ground by a huge gorilla that had her in its grasp. Summoning her strange power over animals she forced the beast to drop her on the ledge, the animal falling to its death a moment after.

As a feminine version of Tarzan, the story in which this incident appears will be shown at the Liberty theater Sunday and Monday. It is called "Lorraine of the Lions" with Norman Kerry as star and Pasty Ruth Miller opposite him.

The girl is shipwrecked on a deserted island at the age of seven. Here she grows up with wild beasts as her only companions, until she is rescued twelve years later. The girl's experiences on the South Sea Island with her galaxy of pets including 20 lions, two tigers, a gorilla and thirty monkeys, make an interesting narrative.

But when she takes the gorilla back to civilization with her she runs into a series of exciting adventures which surpass even her thrilling jungle life. The animal shows a strange tinge of jealousy and refuses to allow the girl to have human companions.

At the PINE TREE

Buster Keaton as a cowboy! Following "bad men", rounding up thousands of cattle, winning the girl just like all heroes are supposed to do in the great open spaces, but furnishing ten laughs with every thrill—that is the frozen faced comedian's latest and greatest picture, "Go West" which opens at the Pine Tree theater Sunday.

Keaton has had many mirth-provoking roles during his screen career. None, however, has approached that of the young drifter who gets himself into all kinds of outlandish predicaments. The famous screen career also demonstrates in his newest picture that he has a flair for pathos as well as comedy.

"Go West" has a real plot that carries the star to the cotton plantations of the far south, the lumber camps of the frozen north and other places before he finally lands in the ranch country of the West. Some of the most mirthful scenes are crammed into his travels as a boxcar tourist.

Kicked off a train on the desert, the comedian hires out as a cow puncher. He falls in love with a beautiful girl, and acquires a strange pal, a cow. Then the real fun begins.
