GIFTS THAT GROW UP WITH THE CHILDREN

NO day in the whole year means half so much to a child as Christmas day does. We grownups may give dinner parties and exchange gifts, but only to those little tots who are whisked away on Christmas Eve, tucked away all cozy and cozy in their little snowy white beds, does this wonderful day have that glorious perfection that lasts as long as one can believe that Santa Claus is the jolly, apple-cheeked soul who just does manage to get himself down the chimney. Only to small eyes, round with delight, does the Christmas tree seem capped with real snow and do the lights seem to twinkle of their own accord. It is for these wonderful little souls that each member of a devoted family spends his energies maintaining these illusions and filling every minute of the day with new surprises. Some favorite noise has often been taken by Uncle John to see to it that the week before Christmas, where each and every doll she admired was bought for her to be delivered on Christmas. Then Jackie, Aunt Mary's favorite, has been sent a crisp ten dollar bill for the youngster to buy anything he might not receive for Christmas. And so on down grandparents and godparents each and every year lavish gifts upon the tots until a distracted mother realizes that there is nothing in the wide world, including Norway, that little Jackie is not scheduled to receive Christmas. At this moment the inspiration may come to her to say "Give her something that will last." This year it is hoped by the library club that each and every parent will make it a Christmas of books for their youngsters. Mark Twain can be read and re-read in early years — "Huckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawyer," and

An Attractive House with Sunny Rooms

House No. 118

Designed by Frank A. Spangenberg and Earl Martin
Courtesy, American Face Brick Association

HERE has been much discussion about the economy of building the square house over the L-shaped house, and there is little doubt that the square house can be built more economically. But when the L-shaped house is well planned the difference in cost is not excessive, and many home-builders gladly pay the difference to get the advantages which the L-shaped house offers.

The house above illustrated has these features. Notice how the living room and dining room and two of the bedrooms on the second floor have windows on three sides, thus assuring plenty of sunlight and free circulation of air throughout the house. The cheerfulness imparted by such an arrangement is difficult to measure in dollars and cents.

Comfort, convenience and attractiveness one wants in his home, and it is always well in planning a house to bear in mind that a few hundred dollars well spent in getting what one wants may be returned many times over.

Economy and skimping are two entirely different matters. Many things in connection with building that seem economical at the start turn out costly, and many things we think we cannot afford turn out to be the most economical.

The experience of the past is teaching many home-builders that first cost is not the vital consideration in building, but that slow depreciation, low repair bills, lower insurance rates and reduced fuel bills really decide the soundness of the home-building investment.

All this is a bit beside a discussion of this particular house, but we shall not see a very great improvement in American homes until the American people learn the fundamentals of home-building economies.

The architects of this house have combined a pleasing and interesting exterior with a well-planned interior. The decorative treatment of the corners, windows and doorway all add to the charm of the face brick walls, while the mass of the house is in good scale and proportion.

The rooms on both floors are comfortably large and conveniently arranged. The overall dimensions of the house are 32 feet by 38 feet.

"Tom Sawyer Abroad," "A Connecticut Yankee," "Life on the Mississippi," and many others. Stevenson offers the incomparable "Child's Garden of Verses" that are as charming to read at five years of age as they are at fifty, and "Treasure Island," "Kidnapped," "Master of Ballantrae," and "Travels with a Donkey," are for both the young and the not so young.

If a child does not love books, they should never be given to him as holiday gifts, since Christmas is no time for cultivating tastes, but, if he does love them, his taste can be gently guided towards books that he will enjoy when he is young and treasure when he is older. This does not mean to exclude the delightful "Oz" books, the lovely old fairy tales, or "Brer Rabbit," but rather to include each Christmas, and each birthday too, one volume of a series that may be the foundation for a grownup library. There are certain authors who lend themselves unusually well to this progressive selection—Kipling, for example. The "Jungle Books" can be thoroughly enjoyed at a very early age; then the "Just So Stories," while "Stalky & Co." is fascinating reading for the very young student, followed by "Plain Tales from the Hills."

POPULAR LOCAL GIRL MARRIED THURSDAY EVENING

A WEDDING of much interest to Klamath Falls people took place on Thursday evening, December tenth, at the hour of seven-thirty, when Miss Lulu Hansen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hansen, became the bride of Mr. O. L. Williams.

About fifteen of the immediate relatives and friends of the popular young couple were present.

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents on Jefferson street, before a lovely improvised altar banked with autumn flowers and ferns. The bride was given in marriage by her father and Rev. A. L. Rice of the First Presbyterian church performed the ring ceremony.

The bride, one of Klamath Falls' most popular young women, was charming in a gown of golden tan and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. Miss Sybil Bamber was the bridesmaid. She was attired in nile green and carried a bouquet of Radiance roses and ferns.

Immediately after the wedding a buffet luncheon was served. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are at home to their friends in the McCarthy apartments.
