

One Half Inch Of Snow Falls; Then Freezes

Pedestrian And Auto Traffic Hazardous On Streets

Lead colored and overhanging clouds gave forth a light snowfall last night that was soon transformed to a covering of ice several hours later when the mercury sank to 18 degrees above zero.

Snow began to fall shortly before 9 o'clock last night and continued for several hours. At midnight the mercury began to drop and the snow on the streets soon froze.

Pedestrian and automobile traffic was extremely hazardous during the morning because of the frozen ice, which caused many a slip on the sidewalks and many a skid on the streets.

Official records of snow fall state that one half an inch of snow fell during last night. This was also the depth of the snow that fell on the Cascades in the vicinity of Pinehurst and Green Springs mountain, according to word received here today at the state highway offices.

At the summit of Sand Creek hill, 45 miles north of Klamath Falls on the Dalles-California highway, one foot and a half of snow fell. Three V-shaped snow plows were put to work immediately on the highway in order that automobile traffic through that section could proceed unimpeded.
