At the PINE TREE

Up to the usual standard is the vaudeville program this week at the Pine Tree. The BigWood Twins are a versatile team and display special skill in their dancing numbers. The Christian Sisters & Burke are a trio of vocal artists and their renditions are particularly expressive and true. Mulkey is one of the best comedy magicians we have seen in a long time who will endeavor to show you that the hand is much quicker than the eye. Harry and Mae Cooper tell of the troubles of customers in the "five and ten" and their act is a continuous sale of laughter. In the aerial classic, the Aerial Allens show that they are past masters in the art of gymnastics, their performance being distinctly different from all other acts of the kind.

Snatches, stunts, stunts. The wall of all women, he they rich or poor. Windows full of clothes to attract them; advertisements of the most appealing sort to intrigue them because for generations that has been the thing to which they have been the most susceptible.

There are women who starve their very souls—for clothes.

There are others who go hungry to satisfy their appetite—for clothes.

"A Slave of Fashion" is in vogue with this most feminine of all yearnings. This production is coming to the Pine Tree theater today. It is from an original story written by Samuel Shipman, adapted and made into continuity by Jess Meredith.

Norma Sherre is the star of the production while Lew Cody is featured. Others important in the cast are Vivian Onden, Mary Carr, Miss Dupont, James Corrigan and Sidney Bracy.
