A CHAT ABOUT LONDON AND WHAT LONDONERS DO

"GET THIN" lunches have become the fad in London. The idea was introduced through writings of Mrs. Charlotte Cameron, traveler and authoress, who told of their introduction in California where she has been the guest of the Adolph Spreckles family in San Francisco and other friends at Los Angeles and Hollywood. She is one of England's most traveled women, having visited most countries of the world.

Mrs. Cameron was entertained so lavishly at so many dinners that she felt she would not be able to undergo the strain of giving a series of long drawn-out course meals "to get even" and this led to inauguration of a scheme of lighter refreshments for her guests.

Menus for Mrs. Cameron's lunches were made out by a Los Angeles doctor who specializes in reducing. Her parties became immensely popular and "thinning lunches" are now very popular in Mayfair. There are indications the idea will extend to dinners.

English widows seem to be losing their cunning. Marriage registration records show that comparatively fewer widows are re-marrying now than at any time in the last half century.

Analysis of the matrimonial outlook say this change is due to improvement in the wisdom and judgment of the unmarried girl. She has become more practical, they say, and has stolen much of the widow's advantage with the marriageable male.

There is a famine in London of hair for making wigs, switches and other false pieces as a result of the vogue of bobbed and shingled hair. When the fashion of cut locks began, women's hair for a time almost glutted the market, but now that about 90 per cent of the women in London prefer the new style, the supply of hair does not begin to meet the demand.
