

Prohi Officers On Wrong Trail

Reports of a large scale moonshining operation on the west side of Klamath lake, 20 miles north of Klamath Falls, proved to be a blind alley to prohibition officers, who, under the leadership of State Prohibition Agent L. L. McBride, investigated the reports yesterday.

The men were there three of them. They were residing in the dense woods and residing in what was positively known to be a moonshiner's cabin. In fact, the exterior setting indicated at first glance that there was in all probability moonshining operation in progress.

Just one thing lacked, to make it a good raid—the three men were not moonshiners. They were trappers, actively engaged in trapping fur bearing animals during the trapping season. The prohi officers took a long look about the trappers' cabin, satisfied themselves that all was well, excused themselves for the intrusion and returned late yesterday to Klamath Falls.

SIDEGLITS OF FASHIONS

FOR THE SMART WOMEN

PERHAPS one of the most attractive costumes recently noticed on Fifth avenue in New York City was an ensemble of red woolen material. Red for gloomy days seems to be in high favor in the leading metropolis. The long coat was made slender and to the hipline and these flared to a full circular hemline which was edged in a band of platinum fox. The standing collar was of fox as were the cuffs of the tight fitting sleeves. With this costume a smart turban of broadened silver cloth, gray pumps and hosiery made it most striking.

Red raincoats of transparent rubberized silk are also much in vogue on the dark rainy days. This popular color is also ruling supreme at the skating rinks.

Let I forget in my rambling on about styles, all smart women are having monogrammed playing cards. Decks of vid-backed cards monogrammed to match their monogrammed bridge scores. The smart stores are doing this work in their stationery departments.

The draped crown that is seen on nearly every hat in Paris is really an old style with new inspirations. Felts are still the smartest things. The newest drupe is where the crown folds in a high tuck at the back although every type of crown drupe is seen.

Flowered chiffon lingerie recalls the days when we wore flowered organdy undies. Some of us can't recall them but they were colorful little affairs that girls gave as wedding gifts in other days. This season the background is invariably white with large floral designs in colors. They are soft and very effective and the bride of January will appreciate a gift of these printed sets which include bloomers, vest and night gown.

LATE NEWS OF STYLES

RECEIVED FROM NEW YORK

ADVANCED style hints from United States leading style center, New York City, have just been received from Mr. A. A. McDonald local merchant who is at the present east on a buying trip.

This following squib from a letter which I today received from him will be of interest to Klamath Falls matrons:

"We are meeting manufacturers who are specializing in sport coats. The manufacturers in New York are featuring an extensive line of sport garments in new tweeds and plaids. There is really no limit to the brightness and intermingling colors. The mannish notch collar coat, which you are so familiar with, is being shown with quite some favor. Some very splendid flare models are shown and will be accepted, also the raglan shoulder and sweeping skirt effect should prove to be very popular. New collar effects have added quite some style and distinction and are different from anything shown heretofore."
