Charley Chaplin Comes Tonight to Liberty in "The Gold Rush"

Charlie Chaplin as a pathetic tenderfoot struggling along with hundreds of others in search of gold in the Klondike, plus the Charlie Chaplin of comedy fame, with all the Chaplin tricks of old—this is the keynote of what has been described as the greatest Chaplin comedy ever filmed—"The Gold Rush", which is announced as the feature attraction for the next three days at the Liberty theatre.

Poetic pathos and whimsical comedy, are blended cleverly in "The Gold Rush," which was more than a year in the making, which will be shown in nine reels, and which has in it all the elements of "big production" which have been lacking in the earlier and short films of this laugh producing genius of the screen.

The picture has its bits of deepest pathos which are swept instantly into moments of hilarious comedy; a picture where the tear of pathos loses itself in the twinkles of laughter.

There is the scene, for instance, where Chaplin, the tenderfoot, a lone bit of human flotsam and jetsam, just a bedraggled bit of lonely humanity, finds a sympathizer and a sweetheart—a girl in a dance hall. In her garish finery she dances with the sad, little tramp, who beams over her shoulder into the eyes of his rival, a wealthy miner.

There is Big Jim McKay, a giant with ox-like strength. He is enraged and the little Lone Prospector trembles as the big man menaces him. And the little man thinks that death, after all, is better than the loss of the queen of the dance hall.

To have the right types in Truckee, in northern California, where many of the scenes of the picture were photographed, Chaplin took a special trainload of tramps, with well-seared faces and tattered garb. In several sequences it seems an endless line of ragged humanity that is crossing the Chilkoot Pass. A blizzard rages, and men are blown about helplessly and hopelessly. They fight on doggedly, as this winding path cut through the snows over a precipitous mountainside, is the gateway to their goal—the Klondike, and gold.

In another stretch in the film is Black Larsen, a fugitive. He builds a little hut in the Alaskan mountains, and there lives as a hermit, amid snow and ice. To the hut comes the pathetic little tramp—Chaplin. He knocks at the door for food and a bite of food, ere plodding on to the land of promised gold Larsen does not care who starves. His only thought is of the police.

The scene aboard a steamship shows human interest at its big height. The luxury and comfort of the first cabin are contrasted with the misery, want and illness in the

NEW YORK, Jan. 25. — (P) — Although the rum fleet off the Long Island and New Jersey coasts has been effectively scattered, much remains to be done and the coast guard has "just begun to fight," Lieutenant Commander S. S. Yeandle of the coast guard, told the annual union ministers' meeting today.

"There is no situation more calculated to stir the indignation of every red blooded patriotic American citizen," he said, "than the presence off our coasts of foreign vessels, manned by foreigners in partnership with disreputable and traitorous Americans, hovering there for the express and well known purpose of flaunting the dignity and power of this, the greatest nation in the world."
