Prince Fond of Golf According to London

LONDON, June 26.—(AP)—Golf under a red umbrella is a feat performed by the Prince of Wales at Sandwich. The heir to the throne was determined not to let rain stop his twice-a-day round of the links.

Out on the links it rained so heavily that the caddies held a red umbrella over the heir apparent and his partner while they were playing their strokes. At the fourteenth green a member of the party asked "is this far enough?" the prince replied, "I don't mind; I like it. Let's carry on." This they did up to the eighteenth green.

When not on the links the prince is often seen on the lawn of Small Down House, which he has rented, practicing putting. It appears this sudden liking for golf and the prince's regularity in playing whenever he gets an opportunity is partly due to the fact that he is anxious to beat his brother, the Duke of York, who at present is the best golfer of the royal family.

King George, the Prince of Wales, Lord Lambourne and many other notables have been under the fire of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals because they engage in fox hunting.

Bathing Suits in Vogue Again

Bathing suits are in vogue. Yesterday marked the hottest day of the summer and with the closing of business houses and offices last evening close to 200 local people motored to Whit-Roe beach on Agency Lake to enjoy a swim.

In motoring by the popular beach resort last evening an array of brightly colored bathing suits greeted one's gaze. The water was delightfully cool. Many of the bathers took picnic lunches with them and did not return to the city until the cool of the evening had set in.

Scores are planning to motor to the beach this evening and Sunday.

Once politicians tossed their hats into the ring. Now they use them for megaphones.
