Trading At Home

A reader of the Herald sends in the following communication which is worthy of consideration by everyone who employs labor. The writer of this letter has some thoughts that are commendable to the Chamber of Commerce for a little campaign along the very lines he mentions, if permanency is one of the cardinal principles of all civic effort, and we know that it is.

Klamath is naturally attracting a great many people who border on the venturesome and once here they seek work, to be sure. But the question of employing that sort or the men and women who are home owners and home builders is a question with only one answer.

We believe that the party who wrote the following letter has done considerable good in awakening this principle which undoubtedly will be received with consideration by all who hire help.

The communication follows:

Editor Herald: It is indeed amusing to hear so much about the "spend your money at home" drive.

When it is all said what does it mean?

I grant that merchandise not made here must be shipped in by merchants in order to accommodate all of the trade. If the merchant makes a fair profit and serves us all there is no ground for complaint along that line.

But, here is a point I wish to make: How many merchants, business men or contractors ask their prospective employees this important question, "Do you live in Klamath Falls, or do you own property here?"

I am afraid there are very, very few. The poor fellow who has made some payments on Klamath property and is struggling to care for his family and finish his payments is too often "out of work right here at home," while some fellow who cares nothing for Klamath Falls, does not intend to invest here, and never loses an opportunity to knock Klamath Falls, always talking about leaving as soon as the roads and weather will permit, is too often chosen to hold the work. In many instances real estate owners are forced to leave the city to make both ends meet through the winter season thereby deserting their little homes for the time being expecting to return later "when things are better."

Yes, it is all right to trade at home, but as a man who works and tries to make his payments on an American home in Klamath Falls, trying also to be loyal and raise a family here. I submit to you if there are not two ways to trade. And should not the man who lives here, spends his earnings here, improves real estate and takes an interest in the schools and improvements, have some consideration over the floater?—A Herald Reader.

The vindictive husband, whose wife uses his razor to open cans, has discovered that a large powder puff makes an elegant shoe brush.

In a well-ordered universe, suits of armor would not have gone out of style before there were windshields to dive through.

Even if you know her face well don't get too familiar with it.

Every man is entitled to life, liberty and freedom in the pursuit of more money.

If it takes all kinds of people to make a world, this world certainly is well made.

It is always humiliating to a man to discover that he doesn't know as much as his wife.

The Consumer Pays

Enactment of income tax in the state makes another tax to raise more money to provide more jobs to build more buildings to add more fixed expense to the people.

And, after all, who finally pays the income tax, the same as all other taxes?

The consumer.

Property taxes are high, yes, very high, but who pays them—the consumer. If one rents a building the owner figures in the taxes, always. If the income tax is put on people will pay it in the long run.

The great objection to an income tax is that industries deplore it and despise it, and refuse to locate in states where it is in force.

Without industries we have no pay rolls.

It therefore harks right back to the man who works, for the fellow who has money enough to run an industry can quit and cease operation any time he may choose. He is not the fellow to be considered, for he will get along. But the men whom he employs are the ones who are interested.

Oregon is again entering a period of industrial restlessness. She has experienced it before, but unlike the child with burned fingers she insists on monkeying with fire once more.

Don't let any argument ever induce you to believe that the consumer, the man who works, the dinner pail carrier, is not the man who pays the taxes of the nation, whether it be property tax or state income tax. There is always a way found to force the tax payment from him.

fowl have died during the last eight or ten years. It is believed that the Utah refuge would enable enough birds to live to compensate for some of the thousands that die in other western states, and that eventually, if the Utah project succeeds, similar work would be done in Oregon, California and elsewhere.

David H. Madsen of Salt Lake City, member of the national committee on the migratory bird refuge and marshland conservation act, asks the Oregon game commission to support the bill.

Beatty Shocked At Death.—BEATTY, (Special The Herald) Feb. 7.—Beatty was shocked to learn of the death of Mrs. Quincey Baker at the Klamath Valley hospital in Klamath Falls on Sunday morning. Mrs. Baker leaves two small babies, her husband, F. Romeo Watah, and her mother, brother John and two young sisters. This marks the fourth death in the Watah family since May. The funeral will be held on Tuesday.

Mrs. Dallas Givans went through Beatty on Saturday on a visit to her folks in Bly, with her two daughters.

Otto Boy of Sprague River was a Beatty visitor on Saturday with Mr. Gregory from the Elder ranch.

How to Play BRIDGE A new series of lessons by Wynne Ferguson

Every once in a while you will hold a hand with which, by a little quick thinking, you can make a big gain. For example, suppose your partner bids one no-trump and second hand passes, what would you do if you held the following hand?

Hearts—K, 7 Clubs—10, 8, 7, 3 Diamonds—K, 10, 4 Spades—A, 8, 6, 5

Would you pass as most players would do or would you bid two no-trump? The purpose of the latter bid is to shut out a bid of two hearts or two diamonds by fourth hand. If this bid should be made and your partner passes, you are not strong enough either to bid two no-trump or double. On the other hand, if you bid two no-trump, it is very unlikely that fourth hand will be strong enough to bid three of a suit but if he does you should double. A bid of two no-trump with the hand given will score game, but if you pass, fourth hand would have bid two hearts and game then becomes impossible. Be on the alert for such hands and don't hesitate to bid two no-trump when there is a good reason for doing so.

The writer has frequently warned his readers of the dangers of preemptive bids unless properly used. Here is a hand that illustrates the point:

Hearts—A Clubs—A, K, J, 9, 8, 5, 4, 2 Diamonds—A, 7 Spades—A, 4

If there were no score, rubber game, what would you bid with Z's hand as?

Problem No. 23

Hearts—Q, 7, 4 Clubs—K, 6, 3 Diamonds—K, J, 9, 7 Spades—6, 4, 2

Hearts—A, 9, 8, 2 Clubs—A, J, 10, 4 Diamonds—A, 6, 3 Spades—A, 7

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no-trump. All passed and A opened the eight of spades. Y played the deuce, B the queen and Z the seven. B now played the ten, Z the ace, A the trey and Y the four. How should Z size up the hand and plan the play? The solution and all four hands will be given in the next article.

Problem No. 24

Hearts—J, 7 Clubs—Q, 10, 8 Diamonds—7, 5 Spades—10, 9

Hearts—9, 6, 2 Clubs—5, 4, 2 Diamonds—J Spades—6, 4

Hearts—K Clubs—A, K, 6, 3 Diamonds—none Spades—Q, J, 8, 2

Hearts—Q, 8, 4 Clubs—J, 9, 7 Diamonds—none Spades—A, K, 7

Hearts are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y-Z win six of the nine tricks against any defense? Solution in next issue.

DON JUAN

Copyright, 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. "Don Juan," screen play by Bess Meredith, starring John Barrymore, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Don Juan's dissipated father had warned him: "Destroy women or they will destroy you, take their love scornfully—and forget!" This advice has made Juan the greatest lover of all time. But his cynicism is suddenly checked by the disarming innocence of Madonna-like Adriana Varanes. The lovers incur the fearful enmity of infamous Lucretia Borgia, who loves Juan, and Donati, her kinsman, who covets Adriana. To save her father's life Adriana agrees to marry Donati, but when Duke Varanes is dragged to the Vatican to sign the agreement Donati breaks into Adriana's room.

There Donati stood with his feet wide apart, his hands on his hips, watching her go, thinking of how easily he would reach her and catch her up in his arms, holding her close, pressing his lips to the white, smooth curve of her throat.

There were all the still night hours in which to conquer her; he need not hasten. And it was amusing to see her trying to face him courageously, with terror in her wide dark eyes.

Adriana's lips moved. She was murmuring a prayer. Surely the Virgin would protect her, would somehow save her from this fate that was far worse than death.

Her terror made her weak; she could hardly stand. All her strength went into that whispered prayer, and Donati, realizing what she was doing, smiled more broadly than ever.

In the hall below there was suspense almost as great. For Juan was there questioning the servants. Not daring to tell him the truth, they swore that Adriana was not in the house; fear of Donati had torn their loyalty to shreds. Knowing that they were lying, Juan thought at first of fighting his way through their ranks and up the stairs; then another plan came to him, and he strode from the house.

He surveyed the room. There was but one hiding place, behind the heavy curtains of the furthest wall. He started toward them, but Adriana ran before him, and stood with outstretched arms, barring his way.

No physical wound could have made him suffer as did this action of hers. It was agony to see her standing there, begging him to go, swearing that there was no one else in the room but they two.

Even as she spoke the curtains moved slightly. He followed their movement to the floor. A mass of feet protruded slightly from beneath the curtains' edge.

A hideous feeling of sickness swept over Juan. As if a curtain had been unrolled to show him another scene, he saw the tower room in his father's castle, when he himself had sat in a little child, watching while another man questioned another woman—while his father questioned his mother, who replied, as this girl was doing now, "There is no one here! I swear there is no one here!"

And suddenly, instead of his mother, he saw Adriana as she faced him, beautiful, innocent seeming, lying, as his mother had lied, to save her lover.

The cry that parted his lips was one of rage, and of hatred. With a sudden, swift movement he leaped forward and tore down the curtains, revealing Donati, standing with drawn sword.

Then, as if possessed by demons, he began to laugh like a maniac, harsh, mad laughter that echoed in the lofty room.

"I believed in a woman's goodness, in her purity and loyalty!" he cried, and his voice broke on the words. "Laugh—for I am the fool of Rome!"

"Juan! Juan!" Adriana cried, and would have thrown her arms about him, but he thrust her back.

He was himself again, suddenly, the self he had been before he knew and loved her. His smile was bitter, sardonic, his voice cold.
