Our Youthful Ball Players

Nothing pleases the Herald more than to see the boys begin to limber up their arms and play ball. It is not only an indication of the summery season, but it is also an indication of healthy boys, strictly American in instinct and habit.

Where two or three boys are gathered together there is the start of a ball game. It matters not that an alley, a street, back yard, is all that is available. The rules are adjusted to suit the conditions. The American boy holds a master's degree in accommodating himself to circumstances.

Observation is convincing that there is as much fun to be had in playing an alley game interrupted frequently by passing trucks and with improvised equipment as under conditions where there is more room and nothing to interfere with the progress of the game. If a mitt salvaged from a rubbish heap is not the prized possession of some boy something else can be made to supply the deficiency, for no self-respecting boy would try to play ball without giving at least an imitation of possessing a mitt. And games of this character are thoroughly democratic. There is no snobbishness, no race prejudice. Boys of half-dozen shades of color may participate, but all are American because they are devoted to the national game.

One who observes the efforts of small boys in playing ball amid such restricted surroundings cannot repress a regret that better facilities for play are not afforded. Yet those who make the best of what they have are learning a valuable lesson, though they may not be aware of it. The small boy who is able to play in the confines of an alley and get a lot of fun out of it is imbibing instruction in the philosophy of getting something out of life wherever life finds him. He should have a better place to play, but a wider space might make less demand on his ingenuity. Thus there are lessons to be learned in cramped quarters for the boy who is alert.

And the right kind of a boy who learns to make the best of an alley will be the kind who will make the most of his circumstances in later life and he is not likely to be satisfied with an alley when he gets old enough to work for himself in the more serious game of life.

Frosts and Fruits

One thing about the Klamath Basin, you do not get up in the morning and hear some one say, "well, the frost last night got the fruit crop." We have heard that so much, that it really seems strange there is no fruit to protect in this part of the state. But there is none. At least, there is not enough to worry about.

Klamath county is willing to produce butter, eggs, ham and beef and let the other parts of Oregon produce the fruit. It is a fickle lover—the fruit game—and everyone who has had experience with it will admit that fact.

Elinor Glynn advises the American girl "to cling to her youth." The only objection to this is that it leaves talcum on his lapels.

The world changes in spite of those who refuse to believe it.

Looking down on others doesn't place you above them.

The laws of nature are always enforced.

All hair tonic raises is hopes.

A Mother's Martyrdom

Says Frank Irvine in the Portland "Journal":
 No story of the storm, the mountain and a mother's devotion is more touching than that from Paisley.

A 22-year-old mother, her children of six, four and two, alone, foodless, fireless and shelterless from Saturday night until Monday night in four feet of snow in the deep mountains, too starved to resist the winter cold, the two older children freezing to death before the mother's eyes is a picture of human suffering that words cannot paint.

Outstanding in the tragedy is the act of the mother, clad in thin cotton garments, taking off the coat she needed so much for her own comfort and wrapping her babe in it. Story and tradition through all time have recounted the sacrifices for their offspring of mothers. The animal in the jungles and forests, the human mother on every level of life, have all suffered and sacrificed, in myriad instances yielding up life itself.

The world has never sounded the full depths of maternal devotion. There is no way to measure the fullness of a mother heart. If children could only know the everlasting affection that has a beginning but never ends, and could have the filial gratitude that affection should inspire, there would be fewer stragglers from the family fireside and fewer tears for child and parent.

Through it all and after it all, no word of complaint has dropped from the lips of this young mother of the Paisley mountain. Man, strong though he be, heralded as he is, bears up under no martyrdom like that. He hasn't fortitude like that. He hasn't endurance so all-pervading. He hasn't courage so limitless.

The story of Mrs. Amburgey is the world's great story of motherhood, today, yesterday and tomorrow.

That Necessary Clean-up Time

Some one has said that this city needs a cleaning up. A physical cleanup—a face wash.

It needs its alleys combed and the tin can debris taken to the gulches. It needs a little touching up here and there.

Nothing could be more beneficial than for the mayor to declare a clean-up day and ask every business house and professional man to furnish men to help in the community clean-up.

Springtime is the time of new things, when the old and decadent give way to nature's new birth of foliage and plant life, and all the world puts on a new raiment.

Spring also is the clean-up season, when man's habitation should be made to harmonize with nature.

Where there is filth there is nearly always disease. Disorder is accompanied by waste, danger and decay. Dirt and disorder are the greatest enemies to public decency, health and safety.

A few clean and orderly homes in a select residence district can never safeguard the entire community. A single filthy home, dirty backyard, or a stagnant pool may easily become the source of an epidemic of fatal diseases that will sweep a city. A trash pile may start a general conflagration.

Every thrifty housewife knows the need and joy of household cleanliness. She has a general housecleaning twice a year, when she changes her furnishings, but she keeps her home immaculate all the time. No semi-annual nor "annual bath" for her home!

Every individual should be as proud of his city and his habitation and its environments as the most immaculate housekeeper is proud of her home.

An auto is a necessity when the neighbors have one.

Colds come and colds go; where from or to we do not know.

The Boys Who Discovered New Gold Field

The two boys whose discovery of gold at Weepah, Nev., brought in a new "rush" of prospectors are pictured here. They are Frank Horton, Jr., 13 (left foreground) and Leonard Traynor, 13 (right). Among the thousands who have staked out claims in this territory where the ore is reported to assay $75,000 a ton are many women. Note the girls in the left foreground of the picture.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON — Now that the Senate generally admits that it is suffering from an organic ailment, sometimes called a filibuster, it will have to decide whether to take treatment from Dr. Dawes or Dr. Norris.

Following the adjournment of Congress, sine die, after the patient's infirmity had been plainly exposed to the public gaze and after even the patient himself had admitted that something apparently was wrong, the loudest recommendations were for the Dawes treatment.

Outside experts seem to be in more or less accord that Dr. Dawes will get the case and that he will prescribe rigorous treatment which the patient will follow religiously, even though it kills him.

But your correspondent, being acquainted with the patient, begs to suggest that the case is more likely to go to Dr. Norris, the old family doctor.

Of course, there is no question about the diagnosis. The trouble is that the poor fellow, on the most embarrassing occasions, sometimes completely loses control of his tongue. He jabsbers of this, that and the other thing, all day and all night, and for the painful duration of this malady—the medical term for which is filibuster—he is unable to move hand or foot. And by the time he gets over it, he frequently finds that he has let his business affairs go all to pot and that people are laughing at him.

Now the objection to Dr. Charles G. Dawes is that he favors a "kill or cure" method. The patient would be forcibly gagged.

Dr. Dawes is one of these smart, dapper young city fellows, and has been in town only a couple of years. Recently quite a few folks have come to the conclusion that he has a distinct edge on the old-fashioned general practitioner, Dr. George W. Norris.

But some of the old-timers are suspicious of his new-fangled ways. They say the patient was gargled with three or four cures this spring and now look at him. Worse than ever!

What Dr. Norris says is that if the patient were taught to realize that nothing was to be gained by his incessant tongue-clacking, he wouldn't have any more of those spells. He has proposed, in a constitutional amendment passed three times by the Senate, to abolish the short session and bring in a new Congress on the January after its election. He points out that a case of filibuster is quite harmless to the patient except during a short session.

By passing the Norris measure, the Senate has indicated that it knows what is good for it and that it prefers the Norris medicine. The trouble is that the chief pharmacists of the House of Representatives drugstore have refused thus far to mix the dose, although most congressmen favor it.

Nevertheless, the patient is hardly likely just now to desert the old family doctor just so that he can be gagged or have his tongue amputated. Some day the House will mix and deliver the medicine, whereas the Dawes cure, he suspects, is worse than the disease.

Shifting the Burden
 What a relief it is, in times of great trouble, to find someone who can be depended upon to take care of practical matters! When the mind is burdened with grief, even the smallest details are irksome.
 It is our aim to give more than the bare essentials of service to our clients. We like to be entrusted with little duties of helpfulness, and in such cases we act more as sympathetic friends than as a commercial institution. Every department of our service has been organized with the idea of providing an individual service suited to the needs of each case. Our clients may trust the most personal matters to us with perfect assurance that their confidence will be respected.
