STATE SUPREME COURT EDICT IS HELP TO PROHIB Decision Handed Down Strengthens Position of Liquor Enforcement

SALEM, Ore., April 13.—(AP)—The position of prohibition enforcement officers in this state was further strengthened by the state supreme court this morning when a decision was handed down holding that an officer may seize and later introduce as evidence certain articles not specified in the search warrant under which search of a premises is made. The ruling was made in the case of State vs. Otto Muetzel. Circuit Judge J. W. Hamilton of Douglas county being affirmed. The supreme court's decision follows one handed down a week ago in which it was held that an officer may enter and search a man's home without any warrant if he has reasonable grounds to believe that a still is being operated on the premises. In the case ruled upon this morning the sheriff of Douglas county and four deputies had gone to Otto Muetzel's home with a search warrant which specified that they might search the man's premises for "mash, still, supplies, equipment and appliances suitable and used for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, to wit, whiskey." Instead of the still and supplies, however, the officers found a jar of moonshine, a barrel partly filled with wine, and several other jars which gave off the odor of moonshine but were empty at the time. These were confiscated, Muetzel was arrested and tried, and the articles introduced as evidence at this trial. A motion to suppress this evidence as having been obtained without authority was denied by Judge Hamilton, a conviction was had, and an appeal taken. "While it is the general rule," the opinion reads, "that an officer in executing a search warrant has no right to seize any property by virtue of such warrant other than that described therein, this does not affect his duty, if lawfully upon the premises, to seize property that he discovers by his own senses is being then and there used as an instrumentality in the commission of a crime."
