Are We Through Waiting

Railroad events have been moving swiftly in Oregon within the past few days. First it is announced that the transportation tangle in Central Oregon has been straightened out on a basis that is satisfactory to both contenders, and this should mean the end of isolation in the great Central Oregon plateau. The Klamath pine area is to be opened up at once, with great ensuing development, and the interest of the northern lines in Oregon is to be definitely enlisted.

On the heels of this news comes the announcement that the Southern Pacific company will proceed at once to standardize the narrow gauge railroad track between Lakeview, Oregon, and Wendel, California. This means the final completion of the long discussed and long awaited new eastern route direct from Oregon by way of Ogden. That has been a dream in this state for almost as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember.

These developments are particularly important to Eugene and to Klamath Falls, but they are almost as important to the entire state. For years Oregon has lain dormant between two major spheres of railroad interest. It looks very much as if this long period during which we have sat and waited for something to happen is finally at an end—Eugene Register.

Marion Barnes Off For Diamond Lake

Roads to Diamond lake, noted fishing resort in southern Douglas county, will probably be open to automobile travel by Sunday, M. J. Barnes, district game warden, predicted.

Mr. Barnes left yesterday for Diamond lake to help open the Klamath entrance road and to aid in shipping the 17 3-4 million eggs taken at the Diamond lake egg station this spring. The road was open to within eight miles of the lake last week, it was said.
