Happiness

"If you don't care for the things you can't obtain you will be fairly happy."

On the surface, it is not an inspiring message. Not to care for the things we can't obtain is to resign, give up, be supine. And when we quit in life's struggle we pay a dear price, indeed, for our meagre mete of happiness. Most of us perhaps, would rather keep on fighting. There is joy in the fight; joy at least to know there is fight in us.

Let us reverse the formula.

"If you care enough for the things you have obtained, you will be supremely happy."

The humble farmer, on his little farm—if he loves that farm—may be happy beyond compare. If he loves it well, he will till it well, intelligently, thoroughly, and it will yield him rich store. The widowed mother, in the little cottage, has her children, and if she loves them well they will be her life. The clerk at the desk, if he loves his work, will be happy in it. Or the motorman in his cab of steel, may find in the easy response of the throbbing motors and his rolling palace, a sense of responsibility for the passing multitude that will bring him pride and joy.

To be truly happy in our lot we need not be contented.

Indeed, happiness and contentment, while we keep moving on life's highway, are not to be reconciled. If we love the work we do we shall be thrilled not alone to do it well, but to do it better.

Far away fields are always green to too many of us. Only after many fruitless pilgrimages is the simple truth borne home that if the field at our door is not attractive and verdant it is because we do not water its shrubs and grasses. If we love our field we will tend it. And, more important, if we tend it we will come to love it.

And this to them in whom ambition burns: Only by the degree to which you prove yourself true to the modest task of today can you fit yourself for, or inspire others to entrust you with, greater duties tomorrow.

Radio and Pronunciation

Study of English proper names has convinced many that English-speaking peoples are subtle spellers and short-cut pronouncers. Substantiation is everywhere.

The Los Angeles Times for years has printed this lesson in pronunciation on its editorial page: "Los Angeles (Loce Ahng-hayl-ais)." But still natives and visitors alike make it "Loss" instead of "Loce," use the soft "g," and pronounce the "a" as short as sour-cream biscuits.

Processions of Fords rattle through Arizona inquiring for "Tucson." They are strangers to "Too-son"; accent on the final syllable, "o" short.

"Iowa" is still a doubtful state. Nobody but a native can get the true Dixie sound to "Alabama." Missouri is not pronounced "Mizoorie" everywhere. The names of those two great metropolises, Chicago and New York, are not uttered alike by native and visitor.

Into the jungle of proper names the radio wise men are penetrating. The British Broadcasting company has been called up to "correct" the manner in which the names of certain British towns are pronounced, or rather (in the opinion of the natives) mispronounced, by the announcers.

Thus is there discovered another way in which the radio can be made to serve humanity. If the listening public had the assurance that radio pronunciations were always authentic the reformation would be speedy. Already millions, under the influence of the radio, have learned to pronounce many proper names differently, if not correctly.

Interesting Sidelights on Spanish War Veterans Annual Convention

of all the Irish boys between here and Lakeview, including the Devil's Garden, to help him out when the Snails get to wriggling his way to night.

Jerry Thornton, secretary of the Elks lodge at Ashland, city councilman of the Lathia city, and all around good fellow, was one of the war vets milling around yesterday. Jerry commutes between Ashland and Klamath during the convention but for some reason or other he hasn't brought any Lathia water over the hill with him.

Report has it that Seneca Fouts of Portland will be elected Grand Grandissimo of the Military Order of Serpents (Snails) at the annual election in the Loomis building this evening. The song-writing attorney of Portland can think up more devilment for this fun organization than a squad of ordinary fellows, and for that reason his election tonight seems to be assured.

"There's nothing too good for the boys of '98."

So says Harry Poole, theatre owner, who will play host to the war vets and auxiliary at a special showing of a Spanish war photograph at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Poole procured this picture especially for the convention. It is "Across the Pacific" and details thrilling scenes of the Spanish-American conflict.

Joe Goodwin, Portland newspaperman, is a veteran of the Spanish war but hasn't had time to join up with the organization. But he's here this week and having a regular time and will join Scout Young Camp at Portland upon his return there. He is now with the West Coast Lumberman and is in Klamath county obtaining material for stories on the pine industry of this section.

"Real friendship's the greatest thing in the world. It endures above and beyond all else."

This was the sentiment expressed last night by Joe Glessner, deputy county assessor at Portland and one of the Scout Young delegates to the encampment.

Joe was attending the session at veterans' hall yesterday when a man walked up to him and stuck out his hand.

"Hello, there, Joe, old boy," said the stranger.

Then it was Glessner's turn to hand out a few exclamation points.

For the "stranger" was none other than Dr. Gail S. Newsom, Klamath county health officer, who was a boyhood friend with Glessner and whom he had not seen in 25 years. The two old-time pals were inseparable for the remainder of the day.

"Cy" Johnson, now a confirmed Klamath resident, had a lot of fun meeting up with his Portland cronies all day yesterday and today. Cy formerly lived in Portland and saw service in the Philippines with many of the Scout Young delegates. They revived old scenes and old times in extended talking sessions last night.

Letters From the People

July 15th, 1927.

To the Editor:
The careless smoker got busy again, and as a result started a fire across the Klamath River from the George McCollum sawmill on the Ashland highway, which had it not been for the prompt action in getting it under control, would have done serious damage.

People travelling through the timber should be very careful with cigarettes and matches, as the grass is drying up and in a most inflammable condition. Camp fires should be entirely out before leaving them. It is much better to be careful than to allow fire to escape, for when timber is killed by fire we all lose either directly or indirectly.

Section 27 of Oregon fire law provides a penalty of as high as $75.00 for throwing any lighted material in any highway or forest land within the state, and sections 12 and 26 provide penalties as high as $100.00 and 60 days in jail for leaving camp fires burning.

Careless campers not only make it disagreeable for their fellow campers who wish to camp there later, but are taking a chance of being caught in their carelessness and getting a valuable conversation with the judge. Any information regarding carelessness will be appreciated, and will help greatly in forest protection.

State Fire Warden,
