DAY STATE TOBACCO

AMHERST, Mass., Oct. 8.—Massachusetts, whose population per square mile is greater than that of any state except Rhode Island, still has a little room left for tobacco farming. The Massachusetts Agricultural College reports that the yearly crop now averages between 14,000,000 and 15,000,000 pounds, virtually all of which is grown in three counties in the Connecticut River valley.

"HONEST ABE" LOVED CHICKEN

MISSOULA, Mont., Oct. 8. (AP)—A 72-year-old patient at St. Patrick's hospital here, recalls Abraham Lincoln, not as a statesman, but as a lover of good food, especially chicken.

Mrs. W. W. Johnson's view of the martyred president goes back 67 years to a day when he was not president but merely "Uncle Abe," a friend of her father, G. H. Gano. Gano and Lincoln had gone to school together, not far from Bloomington, and remained much in each other's company until the day came for each to choose his manner of life.

"Guess I'll be a farmer," said Mr. Gano.

"Think I'll be a lawyer," replied Lincoln.

According to Mrs. Johnson's first recollection of him, "Uncle Abe" was accustomed to drop in on Sunday for chicken dinner with his old schoolmate and his family.

"A long shadow coming down the road on Sunday, meant a chicken," Mrs. Johnson recalled smilingly. "One day 'Uncle Abe' came into the yard, put his hat on a tree trunk and said he reckoned he ought to contribute something by catching the chicken, anyhow. But he didn't," continues Mrs. Johnson.

"He was too awkward and when we children tittered at him, he gave up. But he stayed for dinner."

Her next recollection is of "Uncle Abe" when he was in Washington. But he wasn't away very long. One afternoon, an older, grayer man than they had known before came in for dinner. That night, he and her father sat on the porch facing the prairie, and talked far into the night.

"Uncle Abe" answered freely and frankly to all her father's questions.

"He was troubled, all right, but it was like a touch of old times when he took me on his knee the next morning and said, 'be a good girl now for Uncle Abe. Whatever you are, be a good Republican for your Uncle Abe,'" says Mrs. Johnson.

"I guess you can tell how I've always voted."

Recollection of the announcement of the death of President Lincoln remains vividly with Mrs. Johnson.

On a day in April in 1864 when the midwest prairie was teeming with life again, she ran across the field to her father who was plowing. She handed him a paper. After a glimpse at the headlines Mrs. Johnson remembers her father crying, "Here, girlie, tie them up." Lincoln's schoolmate then burst into tears while the child wonderingly obeyed.

"Like children," declares Mrs. Johnson, "men stood crying the next day—crying as though they had lost a father."

Don't care if you have heard it before. It's a good story and we're going to reprint it. So here goes:

"When did the robbery occur," the cross-examining lawyer asked the witness.

"I think—" he began.

"We don't care what you think—we want to know what you know," remarked the lawyer.

"Well, I may as well get off the stand, then," said the witness. "I can't talk without thinking. I'm not a lawyer."
