"I DON'T CARE," SAYS U. S. GIRL, 21

As Death on Canadian Gallows Nears; Love for Murderer Mate, Who Also Must Swing, Frees Her of Terror

By NEA Service

MONTREAL, Quebec, Feb. 29.—The fervid public attention which centered on Ruth Snyder in Sing Sing prison, New York, a short time ago, centers today on a 21-year-old American girl, Doris McDonald, in the Women's Jail here.

Doris McDonald is waiting in the Women's Jail for the dawn of March 23, when, with her husband, George McDonald, she is to be taken out and hanged for the murder of a taxi driver.

There is no hope for the husband. It is generally believed that there is little, if any, for the girl. Only a reprieve from Viscount Willingdon, Governor General of Canada, can save her.

She Doesn't Care

Doris McDonald, who used to boast that she was "tough," but who now is moody and acquiescent, doesn't care. From day to day she sits in her cell and mourns—not for herself, but for her husband.

"If George dies, I want to die too," she has told her guardians time and again. "I don't want to live without him. If he swings, let me swing too."

It happens Doris McDonald bore the name of Snyder in childhood. She was born Elmer May Wilth Snyder, child of Leo Snyder, now of Wheeling, W. Va., and Hazel Snyder, now of Chicago, according to the authorities. Her birthplace was Pittsburg. She was brought up by an Oklahoma City physician. Later she lived in Mount Vernon, N. Y., and Boston. She was first married in New York in 1925. There was a divorce, and the girl then wedded George McDonald, a Canadian from Saint John, New Brunswick.

Flight Follows Crime

The couple arrived in Montreal on July 15 last year. A man giving the name of Fred Palmer accompanied them. They were check forgers and confidence tricksters, but murder wasn't in their line—then. McDonald posed as a commander in the U. S. Navy. When they disappeared two days later, they left behind a trail of unpaid bills and false notes.

They left in a Packard car driven by Odehard Bouchard, French, Canadian, who lived with his wife and eight children at Lachine, a few miles from Montreal. Bouchard never was seen alive again.

A Bit of Masquerading

That same night, Sunday, July 17, the trio arrived in the Packard at the Trout River Immigration Post on the Vermont border. Palmer posed as Mrs. McDonald's husband, while McDonald posed as Bouchard. But Palmer and Mrs. McDonald named different towns when asked where they were married. McDonald signed the name Bouchard as "Bourget." Mrs. McDonald was dressed in a chemise with a rug for a skirt. They were refused admission to the States and returned to Montreal, where they abandoned the car.

The next day Bouchard's lifeless body was found near the Huntington highway three miles from Trout River. He had been shot twice, and thrown face downward in a watery ditch to die. His money, $200, was stolen. Nearby was found a woman's slip, skirt, hat, shoes and stockings, some of them spattered with blood. They later were identified as Doris McDonald's.

For six weeks the McDonalds dropped completely out of sight. Then they were arrested in Butte, Montana under the name of Carter, for passing false checks. A revolver they had was of the same calibre as the bullets found in Bouchard's body. They were extradited to Canada and trial commenced December 5 in the little country town Valleyfield. Palmer, their companion, never was found.

Offered No Defense

The evidence against them was so convincing that they did not even offer a defense, save for a mercy plea by their lawyer, R. L. Calder, K. C., Canada's most famous criminal counsel. Now, in the little jail behind the courthouse where they were tried, they will drop to their deaths.

While Canada is manifesting deep interest in the prospect of a young and attractive looking woman having to march to the gibbet, there is but little public expression of sympathy for her.

A committee of New York citizens, principally residents of Mount Vernon, is preparing to intercede with the Canadian government in the girl's behalf, however.

The last woman to die on the gallows in the Dominion was Mrs. Cordelia Vian, of St. Canute, Quebec, who was executed in 1899 with her lover, Sam Paraglow, for the murder of her husband.

At The Pine Tree

The bill today at the Pine Tree Theatre contains a plethora of talent with the whizbang revue taking pride of place for honors on the show.

Dancing Danny White offers a comedy concoction of song and dance.

La Petite Jennie and Company, the dolly dancer in "A doll revue" has been dubbed by many critics the Terpsichorean Librarian.

The Kostas in "Footbalment" is a combination of eccentricities that are sure laugh winners.

Shirley and Grant make a specialty of tap dancing and in this branch of the art they are an outstanding figure.

The Whizbang Revue featuring the three Coopers is a pot pourri of music and song neatly dovetailed into an ideal vaudeville presentation.

On the screen, Olive Borden starring in "The Secret Studio." The story of a thrill seeking girl who played with fire in the secret studios of Artists and Models. A fascinating revelation of the gay life of the Latin quarters.

"What Price Glory"

No one is safe!

Society leader, laborer or messenger—no matter who we are—every one of us may offend unknowingly.

BODY ODOR... plays no favorites

Use this purifying toilet soap—keeps you fresh

AN INTERESTING FACE, a wonderful smile—attraction, charm. All spoiled by that one inexcusable fault to which all of us are subject—body odor.

Even on coldest days no one is safe, for our pores continually give off invisible perspiration—often as much as a quart of waste every 24 hours.

Why take chances?

Whether this body waste is visible or not—it is always odorous. And no one escapes it. Without taking precautions—anyone may offend. And unfortunately, though we notice odor instantly in others, we cannot tell when we are guilty.
