pitiful figure of a little woman, huddled in a vivid red sweater, wringing her hands. Her name was Mrs. Russell Hansen, and she told the Associated Press correspondent that her little daughter had lived with her grandmother up San Francisco quite anonymously. She pointed to the place where the grandmother's small home had stood beside a cottonwood tree.

It was nothing but a flat billboard-like surface of yellow sand, and the cottonwood tree had been stripped even of its bark by the wild waters. A grotesque figure in a long fur coat waded up and down the dwindling stream which followed in the wake of the 75-foot high torrent of a little after midnight. It was Jimmy Errachow, a rancher, half crazed by the disaster, searching for the bodies of his wife and baby. A man in Chicago is a candidate for six offices. At last! The fellow who said "something should be done about that" has wheeled into action.
