"HALF the joy of life is in little things taken on the run. Let us run if we must—even the sands do that—but let us keep our hearts young and our eyes open that nothing worth our while shall escape us. And everything is worth its while if we only grasp it and its significance."

"Tears"

WHEN I consider Life and its few years—
A wisp of fog betwixt us and the sun;
A call to battle, and the battle done
Ere the last echo dies within our ears;
A rose choked in the grass; an hour of fears;
The gusts that past a darkening shore do beat;
The burst of music down an unlistening street—
I wonder at the idleness of tears.

Ye old, old dead, and ye of yesternight,
Chieftains, and bards, and keepers of the sheep,
By every cup of sorrow that you had,
Loose me from tears, and make me see aright
How each hath back what once he stayed to weep;
Homer his sight, David his little lad.

NECESSARY to beauty and health and a happy existence are pep, energy, endurance and good sportsmanship. If we guard our gifts and ourselves selfishly, the rewards will be few and unsatisfying. If we enter each endeavor with a will to succeed, good sportsmanship to fight a losing battle gamely you may be sure that none of the joy of life will pass you by. The quotation would be, "To them that given shall be given." Enthusiasm keeps us young. The woman who faces life with a dreary boredom, or even a half measure of interest will not find her achievements with the grudging efforts she made to secure them. If we could only remember to keep our minds young, alert, always to the new and advanced development of our times, eager to accept happiness that comes our way; our steps would be youthful and bouyant, even when they turned on the "westward trail."

Every day would bring at least one new pleasure, one new achievement, and all the fullness of life would be ours.

Then why don't we?

Why do we permit the years to age our minds? Just a habit, I believe. A bad habit that shuts our hearts to the spirit of living—the spirit of eternal youth.

Enthusiasm is the guard of youth. It is a stay to the creeping paralysis of a large self-satisfied existence. All the artists, the creative geniuses of the world are eternally enthusiastic—perennially youthful. Age holds no terror for them. Each day opens a new vista—a promise of further enchantment, the joy of work to do—the will to do it well.

Treasure your enthusiasm, cultivate the spirit and the will to enjoy. It is another one of those secrets of charm, that quality that lasts longer and survives most and defies the passing of years and preserves the youth in your heart forever.

Mrs. Fred C. Murphey and Mrs. Ernest M. Bubb Joint Hostesses at Bridge Tea

STANDING out as one of the most charming functions of the season was the bridge tea of Thursday afternoon over which Mrs. Fred C. Murphey and Mrs. Ernest M. Bubb presided as joint hostesses. The delightful affair was held in the library club room which was exquisite in a decoration of jonquils and ferns made into window boxes. Fronds of ferns intermingled with spring blossoms decorated the side walls of the room. The serving table was set with a low Dresden bowl of roses and jonquils. Pedestals upon which lovely ferns were placed with glowing red tapers here and there about the room added to the charming decoration. On the stage curtain a striking shower corsage of crimson carnations and jonquils was the only decoration. The bridge tables were placed around the room with a cleared space in the center.

On the receiving line with the two charming hostesses were Mrs. S. E. Martin of Oakland and Mrs. William Delzell of Salem. At the door Mrs. Peter A. Albertson and Mrs. E. D. Lamb greeted the guests and directed them.

Helen of Troy Was First Woman to Get Clothes from Paris

Minneapolis, April 21.—Helen of Troy was the first woman in the world "to get her clothes from Paris"—she rejected a number of the best eligible suitors of her time for Paris to attain this distinction, according to Dr. Ralph V. D. Magoffin, who lectured at the Minneapolis Art institute.

He made this humorous reference to the famous woman of history in the course of an illustrated address on recent archaeological findings at Pompeii and other areas bordering the Mediterranean sea. Dr. Magoffin is president of the Archaeological Institute of America and the American Classical league and is head of the department of classics at New York university.

Had Delicatessen Shop.

That Pompeii had the equivalent of the present day delicatessen shop, commercial bakeries and sandal polishing stands like our bootblack stands was shown by Dr. Magoffin in illustrations of recent excavations in the ancient Roman city. The findings have been preserved by the ashes which fell on the city in Vesuvius' eruption of August 24, 79 A. D.

People of Pompeii did not have water meters to measure the quantity of water they drew from the city's elaborate system of lead pipe mains, paying their water tax according to the diameter of the pipes which served their homes. Dr. Magoffin showed pictures of the pipes recently dug up and in an excellent state of preservation. The pipes were equipped with regular faucets, almost identically like those of present day use.

Shows Pictures.

Dr. Magoffin showed pictures of girls dressed in the clothes of Pompeii 2,000 years before the birth of Christ. The pictures, taken at a revival celebration of the costumes of the ancient period, showed the girls wearing dresses with bodices, skirts and sleeves strikingly like American dresses of 20 years ago. The toga did not come into use until about 1500 B. C., Dr. Magoffin explained.

HERE'S MISS ITALY

In the contest in which hundreds competed, Signorina Livia Marracci, 19, was chosen by the Roman newspaper Tevere to represent Italy in the International Pageant of Pulchritude at Galveston, Tex., June 2 to 5. The Gazzetta del Popolo of Turin, the signorina's home, says of her: "She has a dashing and elegant figure. Her eyes have a sweet expression of melancholy—she is indeed the flower of youth."

At The Pine Tree

When the destinies of three men, two women, great political parties and a whole state hang on the shoulders of one beautiful young girl there's sure to be plenty of strong drama. And those who see "The Telephone Girl" at the Pine Tree theater today will get just that—strong drama.

Herbert Brenon's new Paramount production, based on the William C. De Mille play, "The Woman," relates the saga of Kitty O'Brien, telephone girl in the hotel where Matthew Standish, candidate for governor, is being dined on election eve. Kitty has her own troubles without becoming involved in politics. Tom Blake, son of "Boss" Jim Blake, is unable to marry her because of his father's opposition.

At The Liberty

The public sits in a darkened theater and sees the film race over the screen. The action is smooth, the actors move about in a continuous action that unfolds in regular order. Men are born and die on the scree nad the public leaves the theater having seen a story played out in proper order.

They have very little idea of the difficulties and the mishaps that are encountered in the making of this film. They never see the camera or know what happens to the camera-man or when an ontoward event occurs it never appears in the finished film.

In "Tearin' Loose" the picture at the Liberty theater today featuring Wally Wales, the Cowboy Prince, in his first feature, had a number of mishaps during its filming.

The American people pay $20,000,000 a year for music, that is their—well, their music.

Portland Man Surprised at Expansion of Klamath Falls

"Isn't it strange" mused Edwin Caswell, Portland, and recently of New York, "how one will overlook an interesting thing in his own state, and yet be doubly appreciative of something not half so attractive in a neighboring state?

"Now take this city of Klamath Falls, for instance, and its beautiful and rich and productive lumber and farming district. I've lived in the state of Oregon for a good many years and not until today have I realized that here in south central Oregon is a great empire of industry and empire. Of course the term empire may be going too strong; but I mean to say that the potentialities of the Klamath country are immense.

"Chance brought me here, otherwise I may have never learned anything of this country. After finding out in a general way what is happening in this basin, I can't help but wonder if the Klamath citizens themselves, appreciate the significance of it all.

"Needless to say I am extremely impressed by the Klamath community and know with the knowledge of conviction that its future as a prosperous and progressive city is assured."

Mr. Caswell has recently returned from New York where he was engaged in a successful business enterprise. He has entered into business in Portland.

A London newspaper says the prince falls off his horse so often because of crowding, hysterical women on the race courses. We will believe it if the newspaper will explain how it happens the prince never falls off a dance floor.

A physical examination showed Lindbergh had flat feet. Well, they're something he doesn't use much, anyway.
