Dr. Moore's Brother Flying—

Dr. Glenn Moore of this city is in receipt of a clipping from the Sacramento Bee which tells of the thrilling flight his brother, Leo Moore, encountered recently. The clipping in part reads: "Leo Moore, local aviator, got thrills aplenty on his return trip from a hop to Reno which he recently made in his Travel-Air plane, which is powered with an OX 5 motor. Upon taking off from Reno airport and heading for home, Moore encountered a dense fog at an 8,000-foot altitude which apparently had no ceiling. This made flying 'blind' and within a short time Moore was hopelessly lost, groping his way through the bewildering sea of clouds for nearly two hours. Once, just a second before Moore reached the spot, another plane darted suddenly through a hole in the clouds and barely missed crashing him. Finally the lost flyer got his bearings over Donner Lake. He landed with a sigh of relief but with a glow of pride at having met in battle with the elements and emerged a victor."

ICE
Solves Refrigeration's Biggest Problem

ONE of the outstanding advantages of ICE lies in its ability to not only keep food but purify it. As the air circulates over the ice, the impurities and odors from the food are deposited on and absorbed by the film of moisture on the ice cake and carried off in meltage through the outlet. It takes melting ice and an open outlet to do this.

In buying a refrigerator, make sure that it is well insulated, soundly constructed, scientifically designed for proper air circulation, with ample food chamber and ice chamber capacity for the size of your family.
