BREAKS CHEAT BEAVERS FROM WINNING GAME

Hollywood Boosts Standing at Portland's Expense; Oakland Wins

(By The Associated Press)

Hollywood boosted its standing by nosing out Portland 4 to 3 in eleven innings. Although hit freely, Knight and Fullerton pitched steady ball, the breaks going against the Beaver mound star. Lee's double in the eleventh accounted for the winning run. Batteries: Fullerton and Hessler; Knight and Rogo.

While the Seals bobbled the ball for a full game, Oakland stepped in with an 11 to 7 win, the first of the series with San Francisco. Five errors cost the Seals the game, but they retaliated by pounding four Oak pitchers for 15 hits. Lombardi led the Oaks with four hits. Batteries: Dumovich, Boehler, Sparks, Arlett and Lombardi; Moudy, May and Sprinz.

It Costs Money To Be Object of Hero Worship

By AL DEMAREE (Former Pitcher N. Y. Giants)

Being a home-run hero and a nationally famous character has its drawbacks as well as its advantages.

While fanning with the Babe the other day in Chicago he told me that his popularity cost him more than $3,000 a season for baseball tickets for his friends.

Probably among the hundreds of friends and acquaintances that Ruth has left tickets for at the pass gate, not one realizes that the Babe paid for most of them out of his own pocket. Most of them figure that he was given the tickets and that they cost him nothing and Ruth is such a good fellow that he never informs them otherwise.

He is fortunate in being able to indulge in such an expensive hobby. He enjoys it and the fans get a great "kick" walking up to the pass gate and asking for tickets left by "my friend Babe Ruth." So everybody's happy.

HOOKS AND SLIDES

When Backwards?

There can be no doubt in what direction the New York Yankees are going now, but what concerns their opposition more is how long they are going to remain headed in that direction, and when they are going to start the other way.

Some critics believe that the Yankees will be only as long as Ruth. Others fear that Ruth means a difference of only about two runs, and that other younger stars will carry the club on when he falls.

The Yankees apparently are building for that day when they will have to struggle along without the Ruth threat, but some of the sages think that all the Yankee stars will not be the same without the Ruth inspiration.

Discussing the situation recently, a very successful American League manager said: "Considering the very excellent way in which the Yankees are building you might think that Ruth is not a vital factor for the future of the club and that the team might be able to get along without him now. I think so myself. But I have the best of reasons to know that the Yankees think Ruth is their ball club. Most every team in the league is built around one man, and the Yankees certainly are built around the Babe."

Ruth Under Wraps

"Huggins told one of his best friends this year that the club would go to the extremity of actually losing ball games to protect the Babe. He has been ordered to take no chances. He may not always follow orders, but he has been asked never to slide for a base, to exert himself in stretching one or never to take any kind of a chance in going after a ball in the field. Huggins certainly ought to know the vital spark of his team.

"A positive conviction that the whole team will blow when the Babe goes is not much satisfaction to those of us whose business it is to beat the Yankees, however. The Babe looks like he will be good for an indefinite period. Two years ago I would have bet my last cent that he was through, and he looks better physically now than he ever did. And when he obeys instructions to save himself there is no way of telling but what he will be good as long as Cobb."

Another Grand Beauty

Along with Lary and Reese, the $125,000 Pacific Coast beauties, there will report to the New York Yankees next spring a $100,000 kid pitcher. He is Gordon Rhodes, a 19-year-old right hander from the University of Utah who has been a sensation in his first year of professional bays with the Hollywood P. C. L. club.

Connie Mack's agents swooped into the movie domain with an offer of $50,000 and two first-class players. And the buyers of the Pirates and the Giants also chased him, but they found the Yankee tag on him.

Rhodes was discovered by Bill Essick, Yankee coach, and was placed with Hollywood for seasoning. The Yankees have not admitted that he is their property, but they kept quiet all last winter about Lary and Reese.

In his first ten games this year he won eight (four of them shut-outs) and lost two that were blown away by errors. The earned run average against him was less than a half run a game.

Thomas Heehey, canoeing with a pal, saved himself and his friend when the boat upset. And just to prove there was nothing press-agency about the affair, ye bold Thomas dived back in and saved the canoe.

Besides proving himself a hero, Heehey here demonstrated he is just like any other British heavy—he can dive swiftly and gracefully.

Now we know how British heavyweights are able to attain such superb diving condition. They train by tipping over canoes—not to mention a shell of ale occasionally.

But you never can tell about a prize fight (if that's what Heehey means to go in for) or golf. Witness No. 1: Roland Hancock. Roland needed a ten to win the open championship the other day, with two holes to make it in. He rolled a mean twelve.

When Hancock should have been putting, he was putting.
