Al Smith—A New Picture

At The Pine Tree

The origin of state names is generally something of a mystery to most people. This is particularly true of California, which is known as the "Bear State."

The origin of this title dates back to 1847, just before the gold rush, when California was still a part of Mexico. The historical significance of the name is clearly pictured in the stirring romance, "Rose of the Golden West," now at the Pine Tree Theatre.

The state name comes from the activities of General Fremont, pictured in the film, in declaring the "Bear State Rebellion" against Mexico. The perpetrators of the rebellion, headed by General Fremont, wanted a catchy slogan, and "Bear State" was created.

General Fremont and a few hundred Americans seized California from the Spanish grandees and declared it a separate republic, later petitioning that it be taken into the Union as a state. This was done in 1850, the year after gold was discovered.

"Rose of the Golden West" pictures the romantic incidents surrounding the plotting and counter-plotting at the time. Mary Astor plays the principal feminine role, while Gilbert Roland is the dashing Spanish hero of this colorful tale.

Leo Maloney with Monte Cristo, the marvel horse, and the wonder dog, Bullet, will be seen in their latest feature, "The Blind Trail," at the Liberty Theatre today.

In this new opus of the open ranges Leo Maloney, who plays the part of the hero with the aid of his pals, Monte Cristo, the marvel horse, and Bullet, the wonder dog, helps bring the murderers of the money lender to justice.

It is a wonderful story through-out, depicting a certain type of man known to the west who is forever following blind trails for no other reason than to see what may lie beyond the next green hill.

Tourists From England Visit Klamath Basin

A Minerva, one of the popular English motor cars, manufactured in England, attracted much attention on the streets of Klamath Falls yesterday.

Mrs. Guy H. Cheney and three sons of Antwerp, England, making a tour of the United States, stopped in the city for several hours enroute to Crater Lake in the English car.

"Ever since arriving in the United States several months ago we have heard of Crater Lake and are expecting to see one of the most beautiful spots in this country upon our arrival there this evening," Mrs. Cheney told a Herald reporter.

After visiting at Crater Lake the English visitors will enjoy an outing at Diamond Lake and will then motor on north, planning to visit in Canada at Lake Louise and Banff for some time. They will sail for England in early January.
