

POSTMASTERS' CONTRIBUTIONS ARE ADMITTED

New Defends Actions of Georgian Government Officials

BY LEE GERHART
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, July 13. (UP)—Campaign contributions from postmasters were solicited by the Democratic party when in power through its national committee.

Admitting that "there is no doubt that postmasters in Georgia have contributed to the Republican organization," New said that if the committee made inquiry it would find that similar contributions were made to the Democrats when they were in power.

He submitted a file of letters sent out by W. D. Jamieson, director of Finance of the Democratic National committee from 1917 to 1926, asking contributions from postmasters throughout the country.

New told the sub-committee consisting of Senator Brookhart, Iowa Republican and Senator Locher, Ohio Democrat—that when he became postmaster general he made up his mind that if reports were true about the sale of postmasterships in Georgia, he would "investigate them to the fullest extent" and "punish those found guilty of buying offices."

CRATER LAKE LODGE, Oregon. (Special)—In southern Oregon, 50 miles north of California, stands the broken remnant of a once mighty mountain. In its ancient crater bowl lies one of the world's scenic wonders—a lake whose romantic setting and bewitching coloring are unduplicated anywhere.

This broken mountain itself is still lofty, its upper crags soaring 7,000 to 8,000 feet above the sea. The lake is over 1,000 feet below their summits, and is one of the deepest fresh water lakes on earth. The mountain crags, the lake, and the surrounding territory of mountains, pinacles and forests are collectively known as Crater Lake National Park.

The story of Crater Lake and how it came into being was one of the most fascinating features of two state editorial association meetings here during the week of June 25 to July 2. During the early part of the week the California State Editorial Association, led by its president, Friend W. Richardson, was welcomed at this great resort, and immediately following them, on Thursday, the Oregon State Editorial Association convened for its annual meeting. All members of both organizations were guests of R. W. Price, manager of the Crater Lake Lodge.

With Robert W. Sawyer, publisher of the Bend Bulletin and president of the Oregon State Editorial Association, presiding, the Oregon delegation held one of the most interesting meetings in the history of the organization. Members present heard the report of the activities of the new field manager, Harris Ellsworth, and listened to a number of noted speakers. Local and state problems were also discussed during the meetings. Visiting newspapermen from Oregon and California learned that Crater Lake's dwelling place, Mount Mazama, is about 100 miles north of Mount Shasta, California's great sleeping fire mountain, and is a true member of that chain of extinct volcanoes that includes Rainier, Adams and St. Helens in Washington, and Hood, Jefferson and the Three Sisters in Oregon—all snow-capped peaks today of rare scenic loveliness—and Lassen, the still smoldering volcano of California. Mount Mazama's fires, however, are utterly stilled. Its day as a fire-breathing mountain has been over for untold centuries. Its loftiest crag is now but 8,156 feet above sea level. Yet there was a time when this mountain was probably equal to Rainier and Shasta, perhaps overtopping 15,000 feet.

Created by the volcanic forces that cast up its neighbors, Mount Mazama, like them, grew cold. There came a day when great glaciers gathered. Such glaciers may still be seen upon Rainier, Adams, Hood, Shasta and other volcanic cones of the Pacific Northwest.

Yet Mount Mazama is only 7,000 to 8,000 feet high today. What became of the rest of it? Evidently there was a vast cataclysm of nature that carried the upper half of Mount Mazama away, leaving a yawning depression. "But surrounding plains of Oregon do not show debris of an explosion. Yet seventeen cubic miles of rock and lava have vanished from the earth. The conclusion of geologic science is that the entire upper half of Mount Mazama fell in upon itself. But this is only half the story. The resulting crater, or "caldera," 6 miles long and 5 miles wide, has been healed and cooled by the falling rains and snows of ages. This precipitation, rising foot by foot, has covered over the great pit to a depth of nearly 2,000 feet. The site of the vanished summit is thus covered by a vast glittering lake of deepest indigo.

And what a lake! In 1853 a party of prospectors were ranging over the Cascade Range in search of a lost mine. The mine was never found. But the mule of one rider stopped suddenly, his forehead planted at the brink of a mighty crater. It was then that Crater Lake, bloom of the blue lakes of nature, was first beheld by white men's eyes.

For years after the great discovery, Crater Lake remained accessible only to travelers on horseback. But every party that reached the spot brought back stories of the witchery and mystery of this fresh water lake without visible outlet.

And so the varied wonders of Crater Lake came to be known; its blue waters and its painted cliffs, and the prospects that could be obtained from those cliffs, Lino Rock, the Watchman, the Cloud Cap, Glacier Peak, Garfield Peak, Vista Peak and others. It was recognized that here was one of the most interesting scenic spots in the West. So it was made a National Park, and set aside as a place of public recreation for all time.

Newspaper men of both states, some of whom visited the lake for the first time, were enthusiastic in their praise for the area and the lodge, and many are planning to return for longer stays later.
