To Every Official

"I can make no adequate expression of gratitude for the overwhelming confidence of our people who without regard to section or interest have selected me for president of the whole United States.

There has been a vindication of great issues and a determination of the true road of progress. The republican party has again been assessed with a great responsibility. In this great hour there can be for me no feeling of victory or exultation. Rather, it imposes a sense of solemn responsibility of the future and of complete dependence upon divine guidance for the task which the greatest office in the world imposes.

"That task is to give the best within me to interpret the common sense and the ideals of the American people. I can only succeed in my part by the co-operation and unity of spirit of all leaders of opinion and of actions for the common service of our country."—Extract from Herbert Hoover's first statement following his election as president of the United States.

IN THE above words Herbert Hoover not only points out his duties but he tells of the duties of every official elected to office—from the White House down to the smallest city office.

The day when some conducted a campaign for election only to feel that they had acquired a pension and loafing place is past.

Public service means something today, and will mean more each month in the future with a man in the White House who sets an example for hard work and who demands results.

Every political unit can well expect the same constancy in proportion, from its officials that Hoover will give this nation.

Political machines have been broken. Those who elect men to office must see that those officials make good.

To accept political office now means a heavy responsibility, not only upon the man or woman who enjoys such election, but also upon any person or group of persons who sponsors the election of any individual.

An Editorial In The News

SOMETIMES a little news dispatch points its own moral better than a whole column of editorial comment could do.

A man was found dead in the sand dunes of the outskirts of Manistee, Mich., the other day. Evidently he had died of exposure. Beside him, half gripped in the fingers of one hand, was a quart whiskey bottle, nearly ended. The story that told about it concluded:

"Contents of the bottle will be sent to the state chemists for analysis."

That story, we submit, needs no editorial writer to point its moral.

Apparently a padlock is a little hickey placed on the door to keep New York police from bothering the bootleggers inside.

Example of sex equality: "Running with that crowd is bad enough, Sadie; but why must you bring those drunk females home with you?"

Free people are those who overthrew the royalty and nobility that scorned them and now leave the Government to job-holders they scorn.

Fable: Once a flapper posed for a newspaper photographer and didn't cross her legs.

HEAR PLEA OF A. KEYES TODAY

As a parting shot, she branded it all a "political dodge" and then turning to the defense of Asa Keyes, district attorney of Los Angeles county whose activities the grand jury has been perturbed about, she described him as a "football" kicked about by political parties.

Keyes has been ordered to court with seven others today to enter a plea to indictments charging him with corruption and bribery in his legal stronghold. "It is a case of one party wanting to get Keyes out and others wanting him," Mrs. McPherson was quoted. "It is just the sort of thing we get around election time."

Outwardly, Keyes is out of politics. He resigned from office some weeks ago with the explanation that he believed he had completed a faithful life of public service and wanted to devote his time to his family. His resignation takes effect December 5. Mrs. McPherson is completing a European tour, undertaking to preach the gospel of good against the spirit of evil. She left Los Angeles some weeks ago.

While the evangelist was denying the ramblings of bribery, three of the persons who played outstanding parts in her kidnapping story were reported to have been subpoenaed by the grand jury. They were Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of the evangelist; Kenneth G. Ormiston, Mrs. McPherson's "radio" man and Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman-Silaff, the mysterious "Miss X" of the kidnaping case.

It was anticipated that they would be interrogated about documentary evidence which newspapermen furnished the grand jury several days ago. It was reported that the evidence indicated that more than $100,000 was spent in defense of Mrs. McPherson on charges that she and her mother had obstructed justice. The charges, now nearly two years old, grew out of the evangelist's disappearance and her story that she had been kidnaped. When investigated by the grand jury, the story resulted in the placing of charges against the mother and daughter. These were dismissed later by Keyes for lack of evidence.

Letters From the People

Mr. Bruce Dennis, Klamath Falls, Oregon.

Dear Sir—I have read with a great deal of interest your editorial, "The Death Trap," and I feel sure that the law-abiding citizens of Merrill heartily endorse what you have said. And I wish to congratulate you upon having backbone enough to speak your sentiments regarding such a public nuisance as the Merrill dance hall has always been in the community.

About a year ago several of the people of the town submitted to our town council a petition, signed by fifty voters of the town, asking that the dance hall be closed at midnight on Saturday nights, and that they use their authority to regulate, as far as possible, the drinking in and around the hall. We felt that we were very modest in our request, but when the petition was presented to the council they laughed us to scorn, and gave us no understanding that they were satisfied with conditions as they were, and that they would do nothing whatever about it.

If you can start something that will forever drive this curse from our midst you will have gained the gratitude of the law-abiding people of Merrill.

Wishing you success in your undertaking, and with best wishes for the success of your paper, I am,

Yours for a Cleaner Merrill,
HERALD SUBSCRIBER.

Thrilling Log Drive of Coos Bay Is Staged

COQUILLE, Ore., Nov. 13. (UP)—A thousand logs came down the Coquille river today, following the heels of 40,000 logs that tumbled down the river Saturday in the first important drives of the belated season.

A moving picture news cameraman was on hand Sunday to take shots of the picturesque run. It is an annual event with the movies and several times scenes have been shot for the flickering drama of logging life. McCALL URGES EARLY MAILING

"As Christmas and the holiday season are again approaching, it is deemed advisable at this time to warn the public of mailing early." Postmaster McCall commented today.

"There is no question that early mailing coupled with prompt efficient handling, is the real solution of the Christmas mail problem. Once we convince our public of the importance and advantages of early mailing, both to themselves and to the vast army of employees, and then obtain their practical co-operation in mailing all Christmas parcels cards and letters in ample time to reach destination and be delivered before Christmas Day, we will have reached the acme of perfection in the handling of this peak load of the year, and there will be no more criticism of the postal service because of the delayed Christmas presents or messages," he concluded.
