Open Your Eyes

IT is not exaggeration to state that the Klamath Basin pine belt is the scene of the most active lumber development in the United States today. No other lumber producing section has such expansion as this country is now undergoing.

The Weyerhaeuser mill is under construction, lumber for the new Pickering mill at Alturas is being assembled; work has started on the construction of the 23-mile logging railroad of the Lamm Lumber company to Yamsey mountain; the Pelican Bay Lumber company and the Ewauna Box company each plan completion of a logging line into respective units of timber in Eastern Klamath and Western Lake county this year; plans are being laid by the Shaw-Bertram Lumber company for the eventual construction of an 18-mile railroad into the Sycan Timber unit; G. C. Lorenz, Klamath Falls lumberman, contemplates the erection of a mill in the near future which will employ 100 men; Klamath mills for the most part have been operating throughout the winter on a two-shift basis, stopping only long enough for repairs; and lumber operators are disposed to regard the forthcoming operating year with a certain amount of equanimity and optimism.

That brief survey in the above paragraph hardly begins to cover the field, but it gives one an insight into what is going on about us; it reveals that the Klamath country is the center today of a lumber development second to none in the nation—a large statement perhaps, but true, nevertheless.

A Fishermen's School

THE "Down East" fisherman is popularly supposed to know all there is to know about his own particular calling, and sending such a person to a school to learn scientific fishery practices sounds a good deal like a joke.

It's being done, however and it's no joke at all. Nineteen fishermen are now attending a six weeks course at Halifax, Nova Scotia, under the direction of the Biological Board of Canada. They are being taught how to run their jobs scientifically—the best way to preserve pickled fish, how to care for and operate a gasoline motor, how to use the great science of navigation, and so on. This sort of thing will make them more efficient in their aged tasks—which means, of course, that they will get more money for the same amount of work.

The old ways aren't apt to be the best, even if they have stood the test of time. Modern science can give a few good tips to almost any profession.

Awful thought. Planes flying far inland during the next war can drop cooties on non-combatants.

Still, the man who thinks he never makes mistakes usually thinks he made one when he selected a wife.

We are an idealistic people, and will make any sacrifice for a cause that won't hurt business.

When money talks, it too frequently says "Good-bye, sucker."

If your little boy is to be a Democrat, take him while young to see how a postoffice looks on the inside.

EDITORIALS FROM OVER THE NATION

THREE THOUSAND MILES OF BORDER AND NO FORTS

Field Marshal Viscount Allenby in the Landmark: Not more than six weeks ago I had the great honor to stand on my hind legs in Chicago making a short response to the toast of my health by the English Speaking Union, whose hospitality I had the privilege of enjoying in several cities of the United States of America.

I had never been in the United States before. I stood on that shore at Chicago and looked across that wide expanse of ocean—it looks like an ocean from the shore—and you know that it goes right away to the chain of great lakes which stretch across forming a border between the United States and Canada.

world have contiguous frontier, marked perhaps only by fort. We in England are on an island but islands have ceased to exist since the air force has developed. We are no longer protected by "the inviolate sea," because a Lindbergh can flex over from the United States in thirty-six hours, quicker than our old fleets could get across to France with an easterly wind a hundred years ago or less. So that now all the frontiers all over the world are very close to each other. That makes it all the more remarkable that on the 3,000 miles of frontier between America and Canada there is no fortress, though every other frontier in the world practically bristles with them. North of those great lakes and south of those great lakes they have one language, the English language; and I believe that is the reason for that trust and why that trust will continue. Peace between the English speaking nations has now endured for exactly eleven years, without a shot being fired in anger; and there is no reason whatever that I can see why a shot ever should be fired in anger between English-speaking nations.
