Too Busy For Beauty!

By Bruce Catton

SPEED is one of the great characteristics of modern America. The automobile, sliding along the highways at any rate that its driver wishes, symbolizes the pace of our lives. We have an enormous amount of energy, and we use most of it in the effort to get everything done in the shortest time possible. Few of us ever relax before evening; as long as there is anything for us to do, we force ourselves to do it at top speed.

None of this, of course, is especially new. But now and then one is compelled to wonder if we aren't traveling just a wee bit faster than we really need to.

In a certain city in the northern part of the country a man was driving downtown to go to work the other day. There had been a heavy, windless snow all the night before. The suburb through which he drove was transformed by it. Perfectly ordinary-looking houses, covered with white blankets, took on a beauty and grace they did not usually have. Trees held clusters of white blossoms on every branch. There was a simple peace and dignity on every street that was not there the night before. The suburb had ceased to be commonplace and had become mystic, unreal and beautiful.

As this man sped on to get to his office, he glanced out of his car window, noticed the beauty of snow-covered houses, trees and lawns, and murmured, "Uh-huh—pretty." He wanted to take a longer look; but traffic was getting heavy, he was in a hurry, and he had to devote all of his attention to driving. So he sped on, and in a few minutes he had left the strange new beauty behind him and was driving through the meaner business streets, where the snow had only intensified the prevailing ugliness.

Now that sort of thing is perfectly ordinary, to be sure. Something similar happens every day, and it is hardly worth noticing, except for this one point; it emphasizes how much our desire for speed causes us to miss.

To get things done quickly is a fine thing. The sluggard is, and always has been, an unlovely creature. We have so many jobs on hand that it's only natural for us to wear ourselves out trying to get them out of the way speedily.

But all of this hurry makes us miss a lot of things that could mean a great deal to us. We drive so fast that we don't have the time to enjoy anything along the way. There is more to life than the simple accomplishment of routine tasks. There are countless little, unexciting things by the way that can give it color and warmth and depth.

Most of us hurry so fast that we can't stop to enjoy them. That is our big mistake. Our lives would be a lot richer if we had the sense to stop along the way once in a while.

When the driver in front holds out his hand, it's a sign you'd better use your brakes unless you are a good guesser.

Peace is that blessed interval when you can denounce the lies of your own side without being dishonorable.

The modernist says people need a new religion. But a new one won't work, either, if people won't use it.

SHE ZIPS.
Columbia Ohio State Journal: One of the greatest inventions of this age of scientific and mechanical development is the zipper fastening. A few years ago the zipper was unknown to the world, now it is seen everywhere, on sweaters, on overalls, on children's leggings, on women's handbags, on men's tobacco pouches and probably, if one looked closely, in a hundred other places.

How the zipper works, the mechanical principle on which it operates, we have never been able to understand precisely, though we have observed it in action many times. We only know that it does work and that is enough. All education may be valuable, as Dr. Eliot said, but we have never seen much sense in burdening one's mind with the details of matters outside one's own sphere, especially when these details come hard, if at all. It would be like compiling one's own dictionary when Webster's and the Standard and the Century are available. One might learn a lot, but one certainly would have to take a great deal of time from one's regular work. All we really care to know about the zipper is that it zips and it certainly does that. We have heard tales of zippers that, after zipping, refused to unzip and had to have their clenched teeth separated.

Trial Marriage Degradation Shown

In "Marriage By Contract," showing tonight at the Pelican, one sees the faults of companionate marriage vividly as that film story is unwound with Patsy Ruth Miller as the woman, and Robert Edeson, Lawrence Gray, and Raymond Keane as some of the experiments. Carrying a powerful sermon against the evils of this type of union it depicts the downfall of a girl who seeks to tamper with God and man-made laws in her reckless pursuit of luxury.

Coming Tomorrow, Richard Barthelmess in "Scarlet Seas"

Richard Barthelmess as a devil-raidin' Salty, in "Scarlet Seas," roaming the Seven Seas of Love and Adventure. What happens when this scrappy tar is cast adrift in midocean in a rowboat with a girl from an island dance hall, makes one of the most exciting dramas we have presented this season. It is one of the best of Barthelmess' many hits. What more could you ask?

K. O. CHRISTNER OUTPOINTED BY TOUGH BASQUE

Paulino Uzcudun Loses First Three Rounds But Comes Back.

By HERBERT W. BARKER. (Associated Press Sports Writer)

NEW YORK, Feb. 23. (AP)—Meyer (K. O.) Christner, the Akron rubber puddler, has proved the dynamite in his right hand is no myth but, in doing so he found one jaw that refused to yield under a pounding from that potent weapon.

Making his second appearance in Madison Square Garden since he knocked out Knute Hansen, the melancholy Dane, Christner dropped the decision to Paulino Uzcudun, rough woodchopper from Spain, in an exciting ten round match in Madison Square Garden last night.

Decision Fair
The decision was eminently fair, for Paulino, after a bad start, came back to give the Akron slugger a thorough trouncing in all but the last of the final eight rounds.

In the final session, Christner, arm-weary as he was, staggered the sturdy Basque with one terrific right to the jaw and then brought vainly an opening for a finishing punch. Paulino, undoubtedly badly hurt, rallied his falling senses long enough to stop inside the next right hand bell Christner threw his way and then bored in too close for the Akron fighter to use his only effective weapon. The final bell found a groggy but courageous Paulino whaling away with both hands to Christner's body.

Started Out Well
Christner, who recently surprised the experts and Jack Sharkey by giving that Boston sailor a tough evening at the Garden, had Paulino in some distress almost before the battle was a minute old. His right cracker like a pistol shot on the Basque's chin and Paulino retreated, badly stunned. Again and again the Ohioan accurately found his target with that right hand, but Paulino finally got in close enough to hang on and recuperate.

Again in the second round Christner punched the Spaniard about the ring while Paulino, vainly trying to get his bearings, made not a single gesture of offense unless a few wild left hooks that did not damage are considered.

Paulino Comes Back
The start of the third round found Christner leading by a wide margin but it was not long until there was a sharp turn-about, this time in Paulino's favor. A heavy left hook thudded home on Christner's stomach and the Ohioan winced perceptibly. Having found a dent in his rival's armor at last, Paulino refined his attention exclusively thereafter to Christner's body. That was good strategy, as it proved, for the steady tattoo Paulino pounded on the Akron's battler's body eventually slowed him up and took much of the sting out of his punches.

From then on it was all Paulino, barring that tenth round rally by Christner. Christner did not have time to use his right hand. He was too busy trying to formulate a defense for Paulino's body attack. He never did find a de-

AT THE LIBERTY

A thrilling and exciting drama of the underworld "Nameless Men" a Tiffany-Stahl production is the name of the features which was shown here for the first time at the Liberty theatre today at matinee where it runs again tonight. It held the audience throughout its unreeling and gives a graphic portrayal of underworld characters who are constantly using their wits to take life easy.

Tim McCoy Tomorrow
Col. Tim McCoy is being shown tomorrow and Monday at the Liberty in "The Bush Ranger" which takes the western hero here to the faraway plains of Australia.

fense and therein lies the story of his defeat.

Has Punch in 10th
Battered and roughed around for seven rounds, Christner did rally long enough to come within an ace of flooring and perhaps stopping Paulino in the last round but the Basque had piled up too big a lead to lose except by knockout. And for all the power in his right hand, Christner could not sweep the rugged Spaniard from his feet.

The match attracted a capacity crowd of 20,000.

ule of fees on January 1 of next year. If we pass H. B. 519 to satisfy the proponents of the used car license fees, and the necessary constitutional amendment is passed by the people at the next election then on July 1, 1931, a second schedule of license fees would be thrust on the people. Confusion would be the result.

Andrews claims that if the provisions of H. B. 230 are put into effect, which reduce the license fee and raise the gas tax one cent, there will be no clamor for a schedule to favor used cars. If there is such a demand, the 1931 legislature can meet it, says Andrews.

Howard and Winslow, chairmen of the two committees stated that H. B. 519 passed by the lower house largely because Howard promised from the floor of the house that a second bill would be introduced to favor the used car owners. Submission of H. B. 519 to the house they considered as a "moral obligation."

Another bill which is still in committee and on which no action has been taken is the Hamilton, Bell, Hall and Norbald bill to add another one cent tax on gasoline for the benefit of the highway fund.

Letters From the People

The Evening Herald, Klamath Falls, Oregon.

Dear Editor:

It is painfully evident to anyone with least sense of civic pride that our streets are being shamefully neglected.

Every gutter is filled with an assortment of tobacco cans, cigarette packages, orange peel, trash, and filth of every description.

It is true that the recent cold weather made cleaning difficult but for the last week it would have been possible to clean up the greater part of the accumulation of the cold weather.

Within fifty feet of the corner of Eighth and Main streets is a pile of paper boxes, garbage, a Christmas tree, ashes, etc., etc. This has been on the sidewalk there for weeks. Hundreds of people pass this daily on their way to the post office. A truly edifying spectacle for citizens and strangers alike.
