SUGAR WAS ONCE TAXED AS LUXURY

Considered a Delicacy Only Rich Could Afford

A well-known food authority recently pointed out that sugar was once considered "an exotic tropical luxury." As a luxury, sugar was subject to taxation on the theory that it would be used by the wealthy classes that could afford to be taxed. Sugar is now so cheap in price, the food authority went on to show, that it is used by everyone. As a matter of fact, as another scientist recently pointed out, there is now no fuel for the human body as cheap as sugar. "Sugar is one of the cleanest, purest, most wholesome foods," he said. "There is nothing that gives nutriment so cheaply."

The ideal way to use sugar is as a flavorer of all those varied, healthful foods we should eat in order to be strong and well. All children and adults should drink milk each day, and a little sugar and flavoring can be used to make delicious milk-shakes. Modern health authorities affirm that all of us should eat abundant fruits and vegetables, fresh and canned, raw and cooked. It is inadvisable to try to force the members of your family to eat fruits, vegetables and meats unenjoyably prepared. Sweetening is the key-note of delicious, healthful cookery, and don't forget the salutary value of desserts, such as cakes, cookies and ice cream. A bit of sweet makes the meal complete.
