Frank McCornack

INDIVIDUALIST and philanthropist—these two words were the key to the character of Frank McCornack, pioneer resident of Klamath, whose death yesterday brought sorrow into many Klamath homes.

In speaking of philanthropy, one usually refers to million dollar bequests. Rockefeller is a philanthropist; also Kahn, Mellon, Ford, and others. There is another man worthy of the term, Frank McCornack.

Unlike the multi-millionaire of today, Mr. McCornack did not wait until he amassed a fortune to lend a helping hand; and that is probably the reason he was only comfortably well-to-do throughout his life. For years it was his practice to be the guardian angel of a group of "dry" farmers, who barely existed on their barren tracts of land. He would lend money to these people and not exact interest; if the debtor could not pay, the transaction was closed insofar as Mr. McCornack was concerned.

Yes, Frank McCornack was a true philanthropist. His good deeds were accompanied by no public announcement in newspapers, no reward except for the supreme satisfaction of helping out a fellow being in time of need. They came straight from the heart, and reflected the innate nature of an unselfish man.

Mr. McCornack was an individualist, a person of decided and incisive opinions. In a crowd he stood out as an individual. Instinctively, one knew that here was a strong-minded man of character and personality.

Often Frank McCornack was wrong in his ideas; often his conception of city or county administrative policies was not in step with the times—but never in his entire life was he other than sincere in his views; never did a hint of hypocrisy color or shade his opinions.

The loss of Frank McCornack is deeply felt in this community. His particular niche in the Klamath Basin will never be filled.

RETRIBUTION AT LAST

New York Times: Readers will prefer to believe the dispatch from Shamokin, Pa., to the New York Telegram headed: "Auto Wins Dispute With a Locomotive." Whenever the calf kills the butcher, or some such reversal of an age-old equation is brought to light, the lovers of sportsmanship everywhere rejoice. Mr. Dana had something of this in mind in his celebrated rescript as to what is news. And he would have approved as a development of his thought, the editorial remark made by George D. Prentice about a contemporary sheet which was rather scanty: "If you see it in the Advertiser, that's news."

To be read with approval and interest, however, news need not be important or require many words for the telling. The Shamokin dispatch was short and dignified. An automobile, driven by a respected citizen, ran broadside into a locomotive at a crossing, suffering only a bent bumper. The locomotive required extensive repairs before it could proceed, and its entire and complicated system of power transmission was put out of whack by the motor car's impact.

Of course, it is not fair for an automobilist to attack a locomotive broadside. He should either creep up on it from behind and smite it in the tender, or he should meet it head-on like a man. In that case he should have the right to ask that the cowcatcher be removed before the collision.

John Doyle, driver of a haker wagon. Identification was accomplished through tracing the shoes back to the manufacturer in St. Louis, thence to Greenville, Pa., where detectives learned that Mrs. Mowry had lived before she left to marry a "Doctor Campbell."

Several features of the slaying of Mrs. Mowry are similar to those of the killing of Margaret Brown, New York governess who was found dying with her clothing afire behind a refreshment stand near Bernardsville, N. J., a year ago.

Miss Brown had drawn her life savings from a bank and some away saying she was to marry a "doctor." Her slayer was never apprehended although some heads identified as having belonged to her were sent to authorities with a note in which the writer said he was the slayer.

ROBBER WANTS LARGE BILLS

Keeney hastily passed her handful of large denomination bills, which the woman gathered up and placed in a purse which she carried in her right hand, with the match.

"Now the rest of them, if you please."

Keeney gathered up the rest of the bills in sight in his cage and handed them to the woman.

"I'd hate to mess things up in here," remarked the woman. "Perhaps you had better not say anything until I get outside."

She turned and walked slowly from the bank.
