Music Is International

THERE is an internationalism to great art that goes far above and beyond the bounds of ordinary national feeling.

When the French republic held funeral services for Marshal Foch, the whole proceedings, naturally enough, were as nationalistic as possible. Foch was pre-eminently a French hero; no one would have dreamed of suggesting that Germans join in honoring his passing.

Yet the funeral music which sounded in Notre Dame and the streets of Paris as Foch was laid to rest was written by Germans. The magnificent funeral march of Siegfried, written by Richard Wagner, and the great "March Heroique," by Ludwig van Beethoven, were played by French bands, for the funeral of a great French warrior—and no one thought of implying that there was anything incongruous in it.

Great music has no nationality. It is the property of each nation that can appreciate it.

A Tip For Mr. Average Man

ONCE again the stock market has gone into a phase which is utterly unintelligible to the lay observer.

One day prices start whirling downward, and it looks as if the long-anticipated slump has really begun. But the next day they go back up, many of them to even higher levels than before; and on succeeding days the new firmness is well maintained.

Even the expert prognosticators disagree as to the future. Some see a sharp bear market in the offing, and others, equally qualified, see just the reverse.

Only one thing is certain. At a time like this Mr. Average Man has no business touching the market at all. Unless he has phenomenal luck, he's apt to get his fingers burned rather badly.

BECOMING AN AUTOMATON

New York Herald-Tribune: Thirty subway and elevated passengers deposited in the turnstiles last December, we learn from the I. R. T. News, $5 gold pieces instead of the intended nickel. Only ten of the coins were claimed later by the owners and refunded. So twenty absent-minded New Yorkers are still out $4.95 each as penalty for acting like automata and for not being able to remember, once the yellow coin was missed, when and where the deed was done.

There may be two views of the coming of the robots. Instead of turning machines into men, it just conceivably is the intention of evolution to turn men into machines; not into the metallic creatures of pistons or cogwheels but into organisms acting as completely by rote and custom as does an engine or a dynamo. Modern biologists have looked with little favor on the Victorian idea that mankind may evolve slowly into a race of giant, hive-ruled insects, efficient enough, but as completely the slaves of blind instinct as are the ants or bees. Yet, despite this biological reprieve, one wonders whether modern city life may not be stimulating mental changes in this direction—changes that make men and women into automata.

Savages have rigid customs but few habits. Before man had become too obviously the lord of creation he watched where he stepped and looked before he leaped. No Cro-Magnon hunter, we venture, would have found a gold pebble in a stream bed only to throw it absent-mindedly at a bird by mistake for a bit of rock.

The typical New Yorker seems to be acquiring a new form of absent-mindedness. He can walk ten or fifteen blocks along the streets, crossing on the whistles and otherwise obeying familiar and instinctive signals, but all the while in a brown study, impervious to everything not his immediate concern. An ant could do no more.

livestock was jack rabbits and coyotes, a single town paid the Burlington railroad alone last year $500,000 in freight charges. More freight was carried over the Union Pacific to and from government projects from Snake River, Idaho, than came from the entire state before these projects were built.

With Calles in the Field

Ex-President Calles of Mexico, who is leading an apparently successful drive on the revolutionists in that country, is pictured here in the field with his federal troops. Above are Calles and General Ortiz holding an impromptu conference on the railroad tracks near Bernajillo. Below, Calles is shown hearing the plea of the wife of a captured rebel general, who is about to be executed and a close-up of Mexico's "Iron Man."

FINDS SAVAGES ARE MORE POLITE THAN AMERICAN STUDENTS

NEW YORK, April 13. (UP)—African savages behave more like ladies and gentlemen at dances than modern American college students, a prominent philosophy professor announced today on his return from the dark continent.

"They wear more clothes and are highly sophisticated," said Dr. A. S. Barrett, formerly of the University of California, who directed an expedition into Nairobi, Kenya and Tanganyika.

"And when they get drunk, they do it much more politely than the people of our own country. They drink Kaffir corn whiskey, and what a tough drink it is. They fill up a big bowl and sit around it, sucking the liquor through bamboo tubes."

Dr. Barrett's expedition returned with a collection of 300 mammals, 1,400 birds, a collection of rare insects, 50,000 feet of motion picture film and more than 1,000 photographs of wild life in interior Africa.

The only exciting experience of the trip was an encounter with an 8-month-old lion cub, which the expedition leader had adopted and which, in one of its playful moments, ripped the entire seat of his trousers away with one stroke.
