Camp Slackness Exposed By Fruit Fly Inspectors

Zeke Thinks It Would Be a Good Idea for California to Provide Long-handled Pitchforks for Examiners in Such Unsanitary Occupation.

BY ZEKE SQUEE

DORRIS, Calif., Aug. 10. (Special)—Your scribe has had the privilege lately of allowing a couple of astronomers look through his telescope. And the nearest they came to locating a new comet in the shape of a Mediterranean fly egg, was a small meteoric tooth brush which constitutes our change of clothing while over here in California.

A CAREFUL man like yours truly, who arises in the morning and slips into a freshly laundered appetite for strawberry shortcake frosted with just enough pants, coats and shirts to keep scandal down in the neighborhood, provides a nice, restful 10 seconds for the inspectors at the state line, where with one clap of the eye they can make a complete examination of our effects.

NOT SO, however, with less fortunate travelers with more clothes, who might be unconsciously packing along a boxful of house flies from the Mediterranean sea. They must stop while the inspectors look through their baggage.

THE COMPLETE examination is rather a recent wrinkle. Formerly the guard stopped you a jiffy while he copied down your car number, and after several questions and a few peeps at your luggage, away you went, careening madly toward the next service station.

BUT NOW affairs are different. If a fly goes south this fall to spend the winter in California, it will not be the guards' fault. The entire load gets a good looking through.

IT IS embarrassing at times for the tourists who pack hurriedly while on the road. But the slackness is never noticed by outsiders until all the pilgrims' goods are aired on the tables at the inspection platform.

THEN THE fine lady of the party will discover that during the shaking up of the trip, her teddy bears have gotten mixed up with the cold potatoes, while the old man finds that his spare breeches are all buttered and ready to serve.

THESE JOYS, with which no auto trip would be complete, may be readily adjusted in camp before the home folks, but when exposure is made in front of a couple of inspectors with one of their wives present, it looks once more as though the whites had gone on the warpath against the reds.

WHILE AT the state line inspection camp near Dorris the other day, the writer hung around awhile to get a chance to look at some of the travelers' "things."

PRETTY SOON along came a high-toned car carrying a group of cackling Californians. The guard wig-wagged. The car stopped. The passengers piled out and their belongings were given a dose of fresh air.

IN THEIR anxiety to get home the sightseers had passed up the last 15 corks, saving their laundry until they could get back to the electric machine, where washing may be done in some comfort. This camp slackness the inspectors exposed.

NEXT, WITHOUT the aid of bait, the inspector flashed out a tent-like rig which still smelled of the Canadian border, where it was last used. Fancy our surprise to discover that the door and window openings were only arm and leg holes in an underwear designed for one of the women of the party.

THE MEDITERRANEAN fly inspectors have a disagreeable job and the state of California should furnish them with a set of long-handled pitchforks as a sanitary measure in making their examinations.

Yours truly,

ZEKE.
