AT THE THEATRES

AT THE PELICAN
Lois Moran, leading woman in so many Fox films successes, made her first motion picture in France, although she is a Pitt-burgh girl. Her ambition was to be a stage dancer. After preliminary training here she went to Paris and won a place in the ballet of the Paris Opera. There her beauty and grace attracted the notice of a French film executive, who persuaded her to accept roles in two of his pictures. After that the dancing was forgotten. Her latest Fox Movietone role is in the "Behind That Curtain," Fox Movietone, all-talking production now showing at the Pelican theatre, in which she is co-featured with Warner Baxter.

AT THE PINE TREE

When Willard Mack, eminent stage star and playwright, began to film "The Voice of the City," his all-talking picture, at the Pine Tree theatre now, it was not by any means his introduction to a film studio.

Willard Mack was a star in pictures when stars were few and far between, in 1913, the days when Charles Ray, Bill Hart and others were just making a start. "The Voice of the City" is a fast-moving story relating the chase of an escaped convict by a detective, and the romance and final clearing of the name of the convict. Playing in it are Robert Ames, Duane Thompson, Sylvia Field, Alice Moo, Beatrice Banard, John Miljan, Tom McGuire, Clark Marshall and James Farley.

We feel proud of our efforts. Never before has this city enjoyed such service as is now at its command. The fellow who says "it can't be done" at this plant simply don't know his berries.
