Stockman In South—

The following clipping from the Stockman's Market Journal of October 10 is of local interest: John S. Horn of Bonanza, Ore. who was on the market this week with three loads of live stock, believes that the crying need of his section of the country is additional railroad service to the California markets.

"It took me 45 hours to reach South San Francisco from Klamath Falls," he said yesterday. "A friend of mine was on the road 60 hours from Lakeview. I wanted to hit the Monday market, but I didn't get here until 10:30 p. m. Monday."

With $12.50 hay, there won't be much feeding in his section, Horn states, and there are quite a few cattle yet to be marketed. The lambs have been pretty well cleaned up. Bonanza is in a $3,000,000 government irrigation district, and although the country is pretty dry, there has been plenty of water for irrigation purposes. Feed is good and they had good grain and hay crops.

The Medford sport writer remarks that while a year ago Gene O'Grady was known as "Ashland's Powder Puff," following his fight with Benny Hill he can be known as "Southern Oregon's Pride." Local sport fans hope Medford doesn't have the idea of saying Madison Square Garden "that the champion was raised on a farm near one of the suburban districts near Medford, Oregon." We're perfectly content to keep Gene, good or bad, as Ashland property.—Ashland Tidings.

Klamath Falls Lauded—

The city of Klamath Falls is apt to have a population of 50,000 within the next 10 or 20 years, dependent on the lumber industry, according to a recent survey made of that city by an eastern man who this week imparted the information to a local banker. The survey was carefully made and included access to many sources of information. Although the lumber industry may quiet down in time, the survey made provision that the city would continue to grow because of agriculture and manufacturing. — Medford Tribune.
