INDUSTRIAL DEMANDS MET

Physical Efficiency Assured by Full Nerve Supply.

One of the great elements in industrial efficiency is health. The future employee must be well, physically and mentally, in order to hold his position. Employers have openings for men and women who are competent, they realize that competency can be nearest perfection only when the employee possesses health.

Employer and Employee
Large manufacturing organizations employing thousands of men and women are introducing rigid physical examination for their employees. This new system is the result of the workmen's compensation act. In brief, this act provides that the employer of labor is held responsible for accidents to workmen in and about his plant.

Data and statistics have proven that very few employees who are physically fit receive injuries during their working hours. It is the ailing men and women who generally suffer from these accidents.

The System
The system of physical examination of new employees, as well as those already associated with the different plants, was first introduced prior to 1914. At that time demand for labor was far less than the supply, and employers were careful to pick only people who possessed ability, and with it, the maximum degree of health. During the war, however, this system was abandoned, very largely due to the increased demand for labor. In fact, the demand exceeded the supply; hence all rigid restrictions were laid aside.

Physical Examinations
Since that time, there has been a general readjustment all along the line of prices, including the price of labor, to a pre-war basis, and this because the supply again exceeds the demand. Competition has entered into the question of labor, as it has into all other products which are on the market for sale. Physical examination is again in vogue, and it becomes a serious problem with many who are compelled to face such examinations conducted by the representatives of industrial plants. These tollers in many cases will be denied the right of employment, perhaps by the selfsame individual who has for months been doctoring them.

Keep Yourself Fit
The far-reaching result of this feature of industrial efficiency has become a grave problem, and it behooves each and every individual who has service to sell to look to his physical health and determine whether or not he can meet the standards.

Physical and mental efficiency is best exemplified in that person who is healthy, because it is impossible for men and women to do the best work if they have been drifting away from health standards. It is well to remember that big business has made an intelligent study of the human element and value the healthy individual for the service he can deliver. Should we not then, as individuals, make a health study of ourselves? Too long have we been neglectful of this phase of progress. The preservation or the gaining of health should be held as a first duty of nature.

Chiropractic
Look up and consult the chiropractor in your neighborhood, and learn more about your human self. You will ask, "What is Chiropractic?" It is primarily a health science, concerning itself far more with studying the elements which constitute health than with a useless waste of time on various phases of disease. Naturally, the chiropractor knows that if health is absent, sickness must be present, and he has determined the conditions which produce sickness in order that he may eliminate them.

Force
In the brain is life force, which is delivered from the brain to all parts of the body. Everyone knows that if the nerves leading to the arm are cut, that arm is paralyzed. It cannot move. It becomes small. It is in truth dead, so far as its use to the body is concerned. Why? Because the nerves are the tiny telegraph wires which carry this life force from the brain to the arm.

Just as this is true of the arm, it is also true of every other part of the body. The stomach must receive its life force from the brain. This is also true of the liver, the kidneys, the heart, the lungs, and in fact every tiny unit of the body. All of this life force is carried from the brain to the body by the nerve fibres. If cutting the nerves supplying the arm paralyzes it, so the cutting of nerves supplying the stomach, the liver, the kidneys, the heart, and the lungs would paralyze these organs.

Loss of Natural Force
However, a nerve does not need to be cut to lose part of its ability to carry life force. If it is squeezed at any point along its course, the life force will be cut off in just that proportion. This is exactly what happens to produce disease and sickness. Nerves emit through tiny openings in the spine. If these little bones of which the spine is composed are not in their proper positions, the size of these openings is decreased. Naturally, if they are made smaller, they produce pressure upon the nerves which pass through them. What part of the body is involved because of this pressure depends on which nerves are squeezed, and it is found that by restoring these small bones to their proper positions, health will result.

What to Do
The chiropractic science is based on this idea. When the chiropractor finds you are sick, he first locates your trouble. If he finds it is in the stomach, he knows immediately where the nerves are pressed upon to produce that condition, in the spine.

and he finds how that pressure is produced. He then replaces the small bones in their natural positions, and as soon as this is accomplished, sickness no longer exists. As this is true of every other part of the body, disease in any part of the body is caused by pressure upon the nerves in some part of the spine, and the removal of that pressure produces health.
