Violin Music.

Somewhere tonight among the hills of heaven she walks, with all her stars around her, And I who lost her on earth Grow happy, knowing God has found her.

So many days along all paths of radiance Made for her feet to tread I sought her, Through all the wide lagoons of dawn And many many lanes of moonlit water.

Now know I by the paths of this strange music Beyond the world she went astraying, Almost you bring me where she walks— Ah, for the love of God, cease not your praying.

THE WOMAN'S DAY

A young girl who is spending her Christmas a thousand miles away from her mother, conceived a practical way to bridge the geographical gap with the human voice.

She went to a shop where you can record on a blank record, and "jazzed off" a whole disc of loving messages and Christmas greetings to her mother and her various friends in the old home town.

It can be played on any regular phonograph, and while it may be less of an artistic triumph than one of Kreisler's violin solos, it is probably the selection her mother would most love to hear on Christmas morning.

"I can just see mother's face when she hears it," she said. "She'll laugh and the tears will come in her eyes, and then she'll play it for everyone that comes in all day—and they'll think I've gone crazy."

"For it is amazing how quickly you run out of things to say—even to your own mother—when you have to use such an artificial medium. You get positively stage struck, and after you have talked a minute or so, and the disc is about half full, you suddenly can't think of another word to say. Then you halt, stumble, and the finish is terrible—but naturally, the worse it is, the funnier it is."

"After I finished mother's, I thought what a good idea it would be to do one for the boy friend—but I didn't take any chances on that. I wrote out a nice little speech, and thought of all the things I wanted to say, and I read it like a good radio speaker. It sounded almost too good to be natural—but I'm quite sure he will be pleased."

GIFTED NEEDLE
Another woman of limited means, but who is what they call "handy" with the needle, has solved the Christmas problem by specializing on just two types of gifts.

All her women relatives and friends are going to receive an apron or something for the clothes closet. For both she uses figured and plain chints, attractively matched or contrasted as to color.

The aprons are the decorative type, which no woman minds being caught in—in fact, the sort you make it a point to appear in before company. Yet they are practical and they are ideal gifts, particularly for women who keep house rather sketchily, and who make a feature of the occasional company dinner.

Going through a city store, she was fascinated by the attention the closet is receiving from interior decorators, and the manner in which it is being embellished. She copied the attractive bags for dresses, covers for hats, the fancy hat and shoe boxes. Every item developed in chintz.

Her shopping was easy, since it required only the purchase of materials, and there was no last minute flurry of hurried and hurried shopping. And the gifts were quite the most desirable assortment I have seen in a long time.

Hazel McClelland Married Recently

The marriage of Miss Hazel B. McClelland, former county health nurse of Klamath county, to Monroe Johnson Lytle, both young people of this city, was solemnized at a quiet home wedding.

The bride wore an ensemble of dark green chiffon velvet, combined with egg shell satin. She carried an over-arm bouquet of cream colored rosebuds.

Rev. Dr. Sydney Hall of McMinnville, Ore., performed the marriage ceremony. Immediately following the ceremony the couple left for Portland, where they are spending a short time before returning to Langell Valley to make their future home.
